

of the warring nations were planned on a basis of gains or loss in territory which have taken place. Garrisons have been captured and towns or cities, possibly, not in the little Chinese possession on the north side of the Shan Tung peninsula of China, there has been going on since late in August a campaign of the world's most powerful nations, and the result is that the German empire is the only one that has lost territory.

The capture of Lung Yau by the British is a tactical act of possession on the Asiatic mainland as well as her last strategic position outside the German empire in Europe.

Fighting on the North Sea and the Lys River Less Violent—French Advance in the Region North of Messines—British Troops Go Forward in the Neighborhood of Arras—Kaiser Has Called a Council of War Over Situation in Gallia.

Paris, Nov. 9.—It was officially stated today that the Germans have taken new offensive against Dixmude and in the region of the Ypres, but all other attacks have been repulsed.

New German attacks in Alsace were repulsed.

The French advance has been slight, because of attacks of the foe in a heavy fog.

French Take New Ground

The following communication was issued by the war office last night:

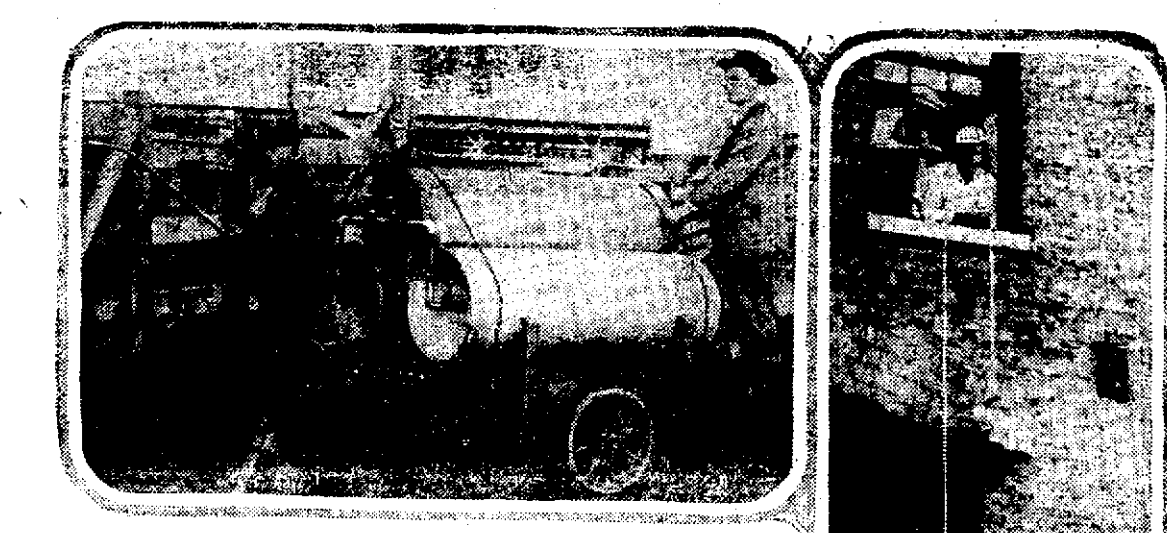

"To the north the enemy appears to have concentrated their activity in the region of Ypres, without result. On the remainder of the line we are holding our ground everywhere.

"On the River Aisne we have reached to the northeast of Soissons the plateau of Vregny on which we had not gained a foothold.

"Elsewhere there is nothing to report."

DUBOIS GUNMEN GIVE THAT TOWN BAD SCARE

DuBois had a shooting affair Saturday afternoon in which the poor marksmanship of the participants was all that prevented a murder. Three Italians were engaged in the affray, Fred Clemens, Angelo Carmela and the latter's son, Joe Carmela. The older men had been drinking in one of the hotels. When young Carmela tried to get his father to go home Clemens became angry and is said to have opened fire on Joe. One bullet passed through Joe's clothing, but no damage was done, although the men were but a few feet apart.

After the shooting Clemens started to run away, but was captured by Sheriff McCloskey, who happened to be in town, and a number of DuBois citizens. Before the 'squire Clemens was fined $25 and placed in the borough lockup, and the Carmelas were fined $20 each on the charge of carrying concealed weapons. It is thought that Clemens will be held to answer before the court to a more serious offense, as he is said to have confessed that he intended to kill the Carmelas.

DU BOIS HIGH SCHOOL GIRL INJURED IN CLEARFIELD

On Saturday evening Miss Elizabeth Hoover, who, with a party of DuBois friends, attended the DuBois-Clearfield football game, was struck by the B. R. & P. train just as it pulled into the station. She had dropped her handkerchief and stooped to pick it up, not realizing how near it was to the track. Because of a curve in the road below the station the train leans toward the station as it comes in. The cylinder of the engine struck her above the right hip. Seeing her danger, John Hughes caught her and pulled her away from the wheels. Miss Hoover was badly cut about the head and suffered several hard bruises, but refused to be taken to the hospital here and was taken on the train to her home in DuBois.

AILMENTS TREATED BY A LOCAL CHIROPRACTOR

"If you should have ailments, consult a Chiropractor and let him put your spinal column on rap with your nervous economy, so you can be a good automatic engine."

—Elbert Hubbard

Chiropractic is a science and has been recognized as such by the Scientific American. The nerves must be in perfect condition, free from pressure—otherwise you cannot remain well. If the spine is right, the man is right. Patients with so-called incurable diseases have regained their health by Chiropractic spinal adjustment.

Chiropractic does not confine itself to any one or special disease. It gets results in 90 per cent. of all disease conditions.

The following official communication was issued from general headquarters yesterday:

Remarkable Escape of Young English Lance Corporal

MARVELOUS TALES OF WOUNDED

Pluck of a Lieutenant Who Tried to Blow Up a Bridge—A Sergeant Who Did a Brave Deed in the Battle in Lorraine, France.

(By International News Service.)

London, Nov. 9.—Many narrow escapes and deeds of wonderful bravery have been made by the injured British and Belgian soldiers now recovering in English hospitals. A young lance corporal of the King's Royal Rifles, who is recovering from a bullet in his knee, owes his life to a crucifix, which he picked up in an empty house, where he was billeted. A strange impulse compelled him to pick up the crucifix and put it in his haversack.

During an engagement a few days later many of the corporal's comrades were killed by bullets, which were almost spent. The young corporal was hit in the knee and later found when taken to a hospital that one of the spent bullets had also passed completely through his knapsack, but had been deflected from his body by the crucifix, one of the arms of which had been broken off by the bullet.

Private W. Hinton, of the First East Lancs, poses as the luckiest man in the army. He was hit by three bullets within a minute without serious injury. One bullet flattered five rounds of ammunition in his belt. Another smashed the magazine of his rifle, and a third passed through his cap.

A Lieutenant's Pluck

A letter from one of the Royal Engineers describes the remarkable pluck of Lieutenant H. Portinger, of Tedworth, Portinger and his section were attempting to blow up a bridge under fire. They had the charge and the section suffered. Lieutenant Portinger and a runner remained behind to guard the fuse. The charge did not explode. The runner then took the fuse and carried it to the bridge, where he was killed. Portinger then said, "I'll make the thing go off." He stood alone with the fuse and walked to the bridge. There he put the fuse in the charge and it exploded, blowing up the bridge. Portinger was then taken to the hospital.

STATEMENT CORRECTING A WRONG IMPRESSION

The following statement by Dr. H. R. Bender, pastor of Trinity M. E. church and H. J. Flegal, superintendent of Trinity M. E. Sunday school, is printed to set at rest an erroneous impression regarding the policy of the Trinity officials:

There was a time when churches used to work on the principle of competition and place their hopes of advancement in efforts to destroy one another. We had thought that day had passed and that a broader vision of the Kingdom had developed the principle of cooperation of the churches. In harmony with this spirit the cooperative system of present-day evangelism has enlisted many denominations in union meetings of great power and efficiency. Our late union effort in this town was made possible by such co-operation and was carried through to the end without creating any sectarian rivalries or selfish activities.

We had hoped that this spirit of co-operation would be perpetuated, but in our present efforts to enlarge our Sunday school complaints come to us that many of our Sunday school members are trying to enlarge their classes by inviting into their classes members of other Sunday schools; that this is being done in the spirit of rivalry, and to the injury of other Sunday schools.

All this is to be deplored; and we earnestly hope that no one enrolled in any other Sunday school will be disturbed in his or her loyalty to their Sunday school.

Rev. H. R. Bender, Pastor.

H. J. Flegal, Superintendent.

GOVERNMENT WINS SUIT AGAINST KATY RAILROAD

Washington, Nov. 9.—The Missouri-Kansas-Texas (Katy) railroad company has been ordered to pay $100,000 to the government for the loss of a train of 100 cars, which was derailed by a landslide on the Katy line near St. Louis. The suit was brought by the government 50 years ago and it was subsequently thrown open for settlement and it was decided by citizens of Oklahoma.

Mastriano and Caro Sentenced to the Pen

Ralph Mastriano and Paul Caro, convicted of murder in the second degree in connection with the killing of Antonio Matabaro on the West Side, were sentenced in this morning's session of court by Judge Bell. The former was given a minimum sentence of five years and a maximum of eight years in the Western penitentiary. Caro's sentence was for a term of from fifteen to eighteen years.

The murder occurred on the West Side early last summer. Both of the convicts were unnerved by the sentence and big tears rolled down over their cheeks after they had learned their fate.

Theodore Zimmerman, a thirteen year old juvenile prisoner, who was arrested in July for breaking into several stores, was sent to the Glen Mills reformatory. Some of the dresses worn by women this fall look as if they were not only made in America, but were designed in Padunk.

When you hear a man say that the Washington party is dying don't hit him; just pity his political ignorance.

Wait until the allies reach German soil and you hear the Kaiser complain of the ancient custom of levying tribute upon conquered cities.

The borough has reason for feeling proud of the repaired North Second street. That thoroughfare is now in better condition than ever.

For a two-year-old the Washington party was quite frisky at the recent election in this state, carrying thirteen counties outright and making an excellent showing in many other counties.

Another Hall of political fame has been demolished in the defeat of the Penrose candidate for state senator and the election of the Washington Democratic candidate in the Twenty-sixth district.

One schoolmaster in the White House in a century is quite sufficient, thank you; therefore the suggestion of Dr. Brumbaugh as the Republican candidate in 1916 isn't meeting with much favor.

We suggest that George Bernard Shaw and Herman Ridder fight it out with Krupp guns and cease to weary the American people with their newspaper controversies. It will be noticed that neither of these patriots is on the firing line in Europe.

A committee of suffragists visited the mayor of Philadelphia the other day and scolded him for his alleged failure to do what the women wanted done. The way to kill woman's suffrage movement in this state is to put thoughtless women on committee to interview statesmen.

Republican newspapers of the better class are now advising the next legislature to carry out the pledges given by Dr. Brumbaugh during the campaign. These papers should direct their appeal to the boss of the legislature, Boies Penrose. But Penrose made no pledge—that he intends to keep.

RIDDER'S NEUTRALITY

Herman Ridder, editor of the Staats Zeitung, published in New York city, in an open communication to a clergyman in Ohio, explains why he is trying to convince American citizens that the Kaiser of Germany is entitled to the friendship of neutral nations. Ridder quotes the admission of President Wilson to the people of the United States to maintain neutrality during the European war, and says that the effect of this advice was destroyed by the anti-German sentiment which was fostered by England and which found vent in American newspapers. Ridder is mistaken. The American people made up their minds that the Kaiser was in the wrong when he ordered the destruction of Belgium, and what the newspapers said merely strengthened the belief in the United States that the war must be held responsible for the beginning of the war as he is responsible for the brutality which has attended the conflict. No sane, educated and civilized American could regard with favor the violation by the Kaiser of the pledge he had given that Belgium's neutrality should be respected.

The Zeitung editor says hundreds of thousands of Americans think as he does, which is possible, but there are several millions of Americans who, reading of the ruthless destruction of Belgium, the levying of tribute upon Brussels, the dropping of bombs on towns the inhabitants of which were not engaged in war and by which women and children were killed and other acts of the German Kaiser, disagree with Herr Ridder. These millions of Americans also blame the Kaiser for sending the best manhood of Germany to be slaughtered in a war, the object of which is commercial aggression and spoliation.

A DIVIDED DEMOCRACY

Now that the smoke of the political battle has passed away the two Democratic factions in this state have inaugurated the usual post-election alteration as to which wing of the party played traitor at the polls. The election returns would seem to indicate that a large number of Ryan Democrats voted for Penrose, some of them because they have always been friendly to the Penrose machine, and others because they would not support A. Mitchell Palmer, the Pennsylvania distributor of federal patronage under the present national administration. It is stated that the old guard will endeavor to wrest control of the Democratic party in this state from the reorganizers. The poor showing made by Palmer in the recent election is seized upon by the reactionaries as good and sufficient cause for demanding that the party shall be turned over to them. But as Palmer holds the tickets to the pie counter the effort to oust him from the position of boss of the Democratic party is not likely to prove successful. The Ryan Democrats lack the ammunition to carry on the siege against Palmer's seat.

Of Interest to Workingmen.
For $1,000,000 invested in liquor 77 men are employed; for $1,000,000 invested in iron 238 men are employed; for $1,000,000 invested in the paper industry 367 are employed; $1,000,000 invested in leather calls for 469 men; in textiles, for 578; in lumber, for 579. It is seen, therefore, that the same amount of money invested in productive and constructive industries employs five times as many workmen as does the liquor industry. If the brewery and distillery be converted into bona fide manufacturing, will it hurt or help the community?

Business Helped.

Instead of "hurting business," the nationwide adoption of the liquor trade would help business. The statement is made—and it is net overdrawn—that to "divide the money" now spent in saloons among the twenty leading necessities of life would require to manufacture them $100,000,000 more raw material than is now used in the manufacture of drink, and would give employment to 1,000,000 more men.

No Saloon Money in Theirs.

Writing from Emporia, Kansas, Walt Mason says in Colliers: "It is a favorite claim of the saloon men that they support the schools, their license money usually going to the school fund. The answer to this is that Emporia has just built a high school costing $136,000—which is going some for a town of 10,000 people. All the grade schools are housed in handsome buildings, the best teachers obtainable are hired, and none of them has to sue for his wages."

"Peg O' My Heart"
There are few dramatic offerings that can boast of a two years continuous run on Broadway, but "Peg O' My Heart," in which Doris Moore is now appearing for her second year is one of these. "Peg O' My Heart" will be the attraction at the New opera house on Friday evening. This is a play that has a plausible story in which laughter and tears are deftly mingled and has also, for its central character, one of the sweetest heroines. "Peg" is an unspoiled, irresponsible bit of a girl who chance throws in the way of a haughty, unnatural family. They are so unlike her that she is made very unhappy, but in the last act, through the man who has won her love, her smiles return. Seats now on sale.

Good Roads Congress to Meet at Atlanta, Ga.

(By International News Service)

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 9.—About five thousand men interested in good roads are here today for the sessions of the fourth American Road congress, which will continue throughout the week. There was a large amount of enthusiasm observable about the places where the delegates congregated. Probably no state was not represented. Atlanta has made elaborate arrangements for entertaining her visitors. The city has been decorated at great expense.

Forty-seven national and state road associations are taking part in the congress, prominent being the American Highway association, the American Automobile association, the American Banker's association and the national civil service reform league.

Many railroads have put on special trains for the congress and the good roads of Georgia have been tested by hundreds of motor cars bearing the delegates here.

Besides the addresses and discussions there are many social features and exhibitions covering 40,000 square feet of floor space. The U. S. government exhibit comprises accurate models of every type of road from the imperial roads of ancient Rome to the modern boulevard and county market road.

Among those expected to address the congress are Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern railway; L. W. Page, director of the U. S. office of public roads; U. S. Senator J. H. Bankhead; Representative Dorsey W. Shackelford; Representative Wm. P. Borland, and many state commissioners of highways.

This afternoon Governor and Mrs.

Stanton gave a reception in the Georgia state capital to the delegates, visitors and their families. All the Atlanta clubs are keeping open house for the delegates.

This is the first meeting of the American Road congress in the South and is a recognition of the great energy and progress that has been made in that section in the movement for improved roads. In 1912, about $40,000,000 was expended by southern states on their public roads, in addition to the labor of thousands of state convicts. Georgia alone had her entire convict force numbering nearly 5,000 engaged in road construction.

The tremendous importance of guarding against extravagance in road expenditures is shown by the fact that while a recent report of the census bureau indicates that the total bonded debt of the 48 states last year was $419,157,000, in the single year of 1912 the states spent about $142,000,000 on roads. The total indebtedness had been accumulating for years, and yet in one year an amount equal to about one-third was spent on roads. This subject will be dealt with exhaustively at the congress.

One of the principal results hoped for by the management of the congress will be the establishment of state railway departments in the six southern states, which have thus far failed to adopt the plan of state supervision, namely Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, Mississippi and Texas. Aside from these six states only Indiana and Montana have failed to establish state highway departments for educational or constructive work.

Good evening! Don't keep your smiles for your friends; give some to your family.

How many men voted as they went?

Ohio went for rum and the Republican party.

Are you still buying goods sold in Clearfield?

If you made a freak election bet, pay it promptly.

Clearfield has not had a fire in four months, a record worth feeling proud over.

However, it will be useless to expect to see a revival of business right away at once.

Read the Progress if you want to keep in touch with what is going on in this old world.

More man may be prepared for almost anything in the way of women's fashions this winter.

With the German and English warships, it looks as if the one dassent and the other is afraid.

And now they have gone and chosen a provisional governor of Mexico whose name is unpronounceable.

Two more states have granted women the right to vote—but they are not east of the Mississippi river.

The wounds borne by the members of the local Democratic factions have not been healed by the election.

The man who loves rabbit potpie can laugh at the prediction that meat will be higher in price this winter.

After all, the war will not be so bad if it results in the driving of the unspeakable Turk out of Europe.

There should be a law prohibiting some men from letting their muffer cut-outs wide open when they talk politics.

Clean up because by doing so you will make your premises attractive and help to keep the town free from contagious disease.

Looks as if the rush for postoffice appointments in Pennsylvania would subside, since Palmer failed to reach the senatorial chair.

There are still districts in this county the election officers in which need instructions as to how to make returns of the voting.

Congress will be Democratic by a small margin, but the margin will be big enough to make things unpleasant for the country, just the same.

DuBois citizens voted in favor of making a third class city of that town. Clearfield will not make any change until she can become a first class city.

Now watch Penrose and Brumbaugh getting busy to prepare for the passage of local option, workmen's compensation and child labor bills through the next legislation.

Well, there must have been a good many temperance people in the hunting woods on Tuesday. Give the women a vote and they will at least vote their convictions.

A "woman in black" is frightening the young men of DuBois at night. It would require a score of women in black to scare the boys of Clearfield off the streets late at night.

It would have been a political crime had the voters refused to return Warren Worth Bailey to congress, where he has been a noted figure among the lesser lights at this session.

An army of Pittsburgh hunters, with scores of dogs, is at work in this and adjoining counties bagging everything wearing feathers or hair. And there are not a few game legs among these Pittsburghers.

"TRIUMPH OF CONSCIENCE" AT THE GLOBE TONIGHT

"The Circus and the Boy." Jimmy Jim, visiting his aunt, is lured to the circus and as a makeshift is pressed off as the "only escaped dwarf in captivity." He is having lots of fun until his mother and aunt get trace of him and yank him out of the circus business.

"The Tribunal of Conscience." This is a story of a wayward son of a rich banker. The boy gets into bad company and goes down the scale until the brink is reached, but is saved through the plans of a servant of his father's. The banker helps the scheme along by disappearing, leaving the servant to tell the boy that his father left nothing but debts. The boy turns out to be of the right stuff and reforms.

"Rube, the Interloper." An unscrupulous but very young man is given the scare of his life by a couple of actresses, who catch him peeping through the keyhole of their room door. A fake murder scene is gotten up for the rule's benefit and the finale is ludicrous.

"The Country Seat War" In two special feature reels, tells a story in which politics, love and crime are depicted with the final triumph of justice and the punishment of the criminals. This is an especially good picture. At the Globe.

AMUSEMENTS

"Peg O' My Heart." Oliver Morosco's delightful comedy "Peg O' My Heart," which will shortly be seen at the new opera house on Friday evening, Nov. 23, proves conclusively that New York can still laugh most heartily and sincerely at humor which is not coarse and risqué. This comedy recently confounded its second year at John Court's beautiful theatre, in New York, which shows that a story, directly and simply told, is more potent than any plot contrived, complex or secretly subtle. The play is described as a comedy of youth and love and is from the pen of J. H. M. Manners, who also wrote such wonderful successes as "Zaza" and "The House Next Door." Seats now on sale.

"CUPID PULLS A TOOTH" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

"Cupid Pulls a Tooth." Father couldn't see a daughter as the husband of his daughter. But John proves that dentists are quite necessary to the human race. Finally, he brings father to the way that leaves one agasp with the humor of it.

"Suspended Sentence." A strong Powers drama at the opera house this evening.

King Baggett, the wonderful versatile artist of the Imp Studio, is shown this evening in a film of his own production, "The Bad of Trap."

"Ghosts." Is an interesting real at the opera house this evening.

The Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

(Copyright, 1914, by Harold MacGrath)

"So'm I," agreed Steve. But his intentions were not honorable. He proposed to desert before any fight took place. Not that he was physically afraid; no, he wanted to dig his hands deep into those doubloons and pieces of eight.

So the four days down passed otherwise uneventfully, amid paint pots and iron rust and three meals a day of pork, onion soup, potatoes, and strong, bitter coffee. The winds became light and balmy and the sea blue and calm. The men went about in their undershirts and dungarees, barefooted. Of course the coming fight was the main topic of conversation. It promised to be a rattling good scrap for both men were evenly matched, and both had a "kick" in either hand. Even the captain took a mild interest in the affair. He was an old sailor. He knew that there was no such word as "obliteration" in a sailor's vocabulary; his disputes could be settled only in one manner, by his calloused fists.

When the old mahook (and some day Steve was going to buy it) and Mang it over the entrance of the (Gibson house) alighted down into the smiling waters of the bay, Steve concluded that discretion was the better part of valor. He would steal ashore on the quarantine tug which lay along-side. He was willing to fight under ordinary circumstances, but he must get his treasure in safety first. They could call him a wretched coward, but he would not let them. So, he gripped the boards of his boat, and, well, took out the box, eyed it, and noted for the first time that it was a box.

STANLEY HARGREAVE. He wrinkled his brow in the effort to recall a pirate by this name, but was unsuccessful. No matter. He dug the box under his coat and made for the gangway, and inadvertently ran into his enemy.

Dunkers caught a bit of the box peeping from under the coat.

"What 'n' yuh got there?" he demanded truculently.

"None o' your damn business! You know me by; hee me?"

"Ain't none o' my business, huh? Where'd yuh git a box like that? Steal it? By criss, I'm goin' t' have a look at that box, my hearty. It don't smell like honest onions."

"You lomme by!" breathed Steve with murder in his heart.

Suddenly the two men closed, surged back and forth, one determined to take the other to hold this mysterious box. Dunkers struggled to uphold his word; not that he really wanted the box but to prove that he was strong enough to take it if he wanted to. The name on the box flashed and disappeared. It was a kind of shock to him. He and Blossom went battering against the rail. Dunkers' grip slipped and so did Blossom's. The result was that the box was catapulted into the sea. With an agonizing cry Blossom leaned far over. He saw the box oscillate for a moment, then sink gracefully in a zigzag course, down through the blue waters. Fainter and fainter it grew, and at last vanished.

"I'm sorry, Steve; but yuh wouldn't let me look at it," said Dunkers, contritely.

"Damn you; I'm goin' t' kill y' for that!"

It became a real fight this time, fist and foot, tooth and nail, one mad with the lust to kill and the other desperately intent on living. It was one of those contests in which honor and fair play have no part. But for the timely arrival of the captain and some of the crew Dunkers would have been badly injured, perhaps fatally. They hauled back Blossom, roaring out his threats at the top of his lungs. It took half an hour's arguing to calm him down. Then the captain demanded to know what it was all about. Steve blubbering, Steve told him.

"Six hundred feet of water, I tell y' my reckoning right. The anchor lies in 60 feet, but the starboard drops sheer 600. You swab! Why didn't you bring the box to me? A man has a right to what he finds. I'd have taken care o' it for you till we got back to port. I knew, y' were greedy, y' thought I might want to stick my fist into y' arse hole. And y' still never did it in 600 feet of water and tangled, porous coral. That's what y' get for being a blamed hog. As for y'," and the captain turned to Dunkers, "get your dunnage and your gear and hunt for another boat back. I won't have no murder on box 2. Can-destination was Cape Town, 22 days' voyage by the calendar.

Vroon carried his information to the organization that same night. They would start the expedition at once, and till this was accomplished, Hargreave's daughter was to be immune from attacks. Besides, it would give Hargreave (wherever he was) and the others the idea that the Black Hundred had concluded to give up the chase.

Above, with his ear to a small hole, skillfully bored through the ceiling without permitting the plaster to fall, knelt a man with a bandaged arm. He could never see any faces; no one ever took off a mask in this sinister chamber. But there were voices, and he was going to forget some of them. After the meeting came to an end, he waited an hour after, and then stole down into the street by the aid of the fire escape. Later, he entered a telephone booth and called up Jones.

Then, one leathern and steel box, dotted with bits of ivory and mother-of-pearl, became two; and the second one was soaked in mud and salt water for two weeks till you could not have told it from the original. And that is why Jones was able, some weeks later, to hide once more the original box. As for the substitute, just as Braine was about to use a mallet and chisel upon it, the lights went out. There was a wild scramble, a chair or two was overturned.

"The door, the door!" shrieked Braine, furious.

It slammed the moment the words left his lips. And as suddenly as they had gone out the lights sprang up. The box was gone. There were evidently traitors among the Black Hundred.

BOBBY FOLWELL KING OF FOOTBALL TRAINERS

BY FRANK G. MENKE.

(Special to the Progress.)

New York, Nov.

Alleganese, is one of the smaller, its student enrollment this year is about 340. Last year it was about 120. Folwell has year and the year had to make his selection from among men who would not be given a second thought by the coaches of other colleges. He had to make his selection from the men—from the kind of men that Yale, Harvard and Michigan would not have considered at all because of their lightness of body and their smallness.

Yet, Folwell, handicapped by the lack of bulk and brawn, did not become discouraged. His men had brains, they had courage and they were game to the core. No chance is frightened them. So Folwell picked out about 25 of the most likely looking candidates, welded them into a machine that, when all things are considered, is the most wonderful football machine ever put together.

The W. & J. backfield this year averages 5 feet 8 inches in height and 160 pounds in weight. It is lighter and shorter in average size than any first-class team in the country, yet that 160 pound backfield tore the powerful Yale and Harvard line to shreds. It ripped through the strong Mr. Union team as though it were paper and then rolled up a 105 to 0 score against Dickinson.

The W. & J. line has thrown back the charging Yale backs. It has thrown back the Harvard backfield and it has thrown back for losses every team that tried to force its way through. It's a pigmy line in comparison with that of the big colleges in the East. It is a Gibraltar line. The best lines ever put together in a college game.

What W. & J. does in size it makes up in brains and spirit. Every man on the W. & J. team must be a Class A. student or he doesn't play football. In W. & J. studies come first. If a student is up in his studies he may play football. If he isn't he can't play. Folwell went to W. & J. college when it was a little-known institution in a football way. In less than two years he brought it to the fore as one of the greatest football institutions in America. Folwell went there and found about 10 unlikely looking footballers responding to his call for candidates. He quickly found that those who presented themselves then were all that would present themselves—that the college was so small that the candidates were but few.

Why shouldn't Yost, Stagg, Haughton, Percy Haughton, of Harvard, Alonzo Stagg, of Chicago, Frank Hickey, of Yale, and Glue Warner, of Calisle, are great coaches. They have accomplished wonderful things in their careers. But the accomplishments of each pale into insignificance in comparison with what Folwell, a former University of Pennsylvania player, has done.

Why shouldn't Yost, Stagg, Haughton, and the others get together great football eleven? They have a student enrollment of from 4000 to 6000 to draw from each year. When they send out a call for football candidates from 200 to 500 men who had considerable football experience at prep and high schools answer the call. And they have a dozen former football stars to assist them in their coaching work.

And Folwell? How different is his situation. W. & J. although one of the oldest colleges was at the

CHAPTER XLVI.

Flood and Fire.

Streaming to make himself heard above the roar of the deluge, Barcus pointed to Alan's ear:

"That devil! He's found the reservoir—opened the sluiceways—turned it into that shaft! We're done for!" Alan had no argument with which to rebuff him. Silently getting on his feet, he groped for Rose in the darkness, momentarily becoming more alarmed as the fall of water shut out the light, and drew her away with him, the slight incline that led back to the bulkhead.

The hour that followed lived over in his memory as an hour in hell. No ray of hope lightened its impenetrable darkness. He could say nothing to comfort the girl; bravely though she strove to keep up her heart, time and again sobbing in his arms like a mad thing, when panic dread caught her by the neck as a terrible October rat. He did there, in the darkness, like so many nervous animals trapped in a snare.

The water mounted rapidly. Within five minutes it drove them back to the elbow in the tunnel; within ten it lapped their ankles as they lingered there, doubting which was the greater peril, to advance or to stand fast and let the flooding tide snuff out the fire of life. To return to the neighborhood of the bulkhead was to court the death indicated by the fuse and the bag of blasting powder.

Of a sudden the thought crossed Alan's mind that Marrophat had arranged the latter solely to keep them away from the bulkhead. Now that he thought of it, he felt certain that the powder room had been deliberately flooded to him by Jimmy.

Probably, then, the keg and fuse were but stage properties—or possibly

Whether or no, was death in one form preferable to the other?

He was decidedly of the opinion that it were better to be extinguished once and for all time, in the space of a second, annihilated by an explosion, than to die thus lingeringly.

On this consideration, he drew Rose with him back to the bulkhead.

When they had been some fifteen minutes beside the bulkhead, the water mounted the head of a slight rise perhaps ten feet behind them, and poured down in ever deeper volume to back up against the barrier.

It was waist deep, however, before they retreated to the head of that rise.

Half an hour later it was waist deep there, on the highest spot in the tunnel.

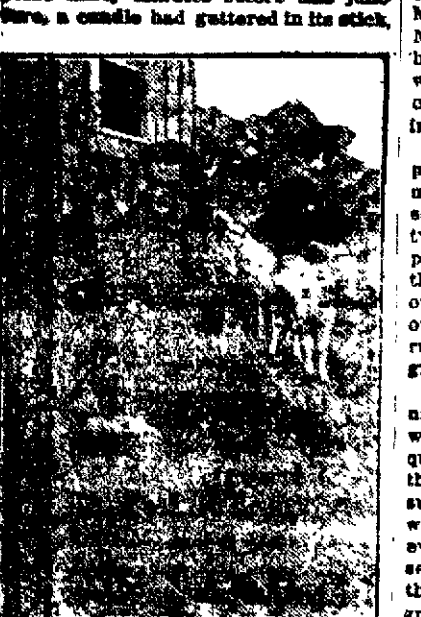

In fifteen minutes more it had reached their thighs. And they stood with head against the roof of the tunnel.

Holding Rose close to him, Alan kissed her lips, that were as cold as death.

Then, fumbling under water, he found the hand of the man at his side.

The water lapped his lips like a blind hand.

In the tunnel that branched off from the main shaft, beyond the bulkhead, some thirty minutes before this June day, a candle had guttered in its stick.

left carelessly thrust into the wall by Marrophat's lieutenant, and guttered, had dropped a flaming wick into a pile of loose-dry debris. This, in turn, flamed, licked hungrily at the timbering that upheld the falls of the tunnel. The smoldering caught fire without delay. In a space of time incredibly brief the flames were spreading right and left, the tunnel was a vault of blustering fury.

As Alan said his last words farewell to Rose and Barcus, the fire spread past in the bottom of the shaft and invaded the powder room.

Alan had guessed right at Marrophat's design, the keg of blasting powder was less than an eighth full, its explosion could not possibly have effected the cave-in Alan had at first feared.

But what Marrophat had overlooked was the proximity to the bag of some several sticks of dynamite, loaded by a firm of earth that had fallen from the crumbling walls.

When the blasting fuse dropped sparks into the blasting powder this last exploded right vitally and the dynamite took its own without the least delay.

The resultant detonation was like a blow. The bulkhead was crashed in like an eggshell barrier. Part of the walls fell in, but the tunnels and shaft remained intact. The released flood streamed out and spread swiftly to the farthest recesses of the burning tunnel. Dense clouds of steam filled that place of terror as the fires were extinguished.

Swept with the stream as it poured out of the tunnel, Alan contrived throughout to retain his hold round the waist of Rose. Barcus shot past him unseen in the darkness. It was not until Alan had contrived to catch an unburned timber and stay himself and his almost witless burden beneath the mouth of the shaft that he discovered Barcus alive, if almost unrecognizable in his mask of mold and soot, battling back toward the shaft against the kneedesp tide.

Half-blinded and stifled as he was by the reek of steam and powder fumes, Alan struggled with himself until his wits were passably clear.

Immediately before him dangled the hoisting bucket and rope.

Surrendering the care of Rose to Barcus, Alan climbed into the bucket and stared upward, examining the walls of the shaft for a way to the top.

There was none other than the most difficult; gaps too great to be bridged by climbing showed in the wooden ladders.

The one feasible route was via the rope. And there was nobody at the top to work the windlass—and Alan hoped there would be nobody to oppose his essay.

He addressed himself to the task without murmuring—lifted himself up on the rope, wound it round one leg and began that heart-breaking climb.

How he accomplished it he never knew. That it must be accomplished was his one, all-absorbing thought. And somehow, by some almost superhuman effort, it was eventually accomplished.

He arrived at the top of the shaft far too exhausted to show surprise when, falling in half-fainting condition within two feet of the brink, he saw Judith Trine running like mad across the clearing.

But without her aid he would not within hours have been able to work the windlass and lift Rose and Barcus to the surface.

CHAPTER XLVII.

The Last Warning.

In the chill, violet-shadowed dusk of that clear evening, a chap-fallen motor car crept sluggishly into the little mountain town of Mesquite at the heels of two mutinous mules, driven by a chauffeur who steered with one hand while the other flourished a crackling whip-lash over the backs of its sole motive power.

Its one passenger, a cripple as helpless as the car itself, huddled in a corner of the rear seat, saluted Mesquite with a snarl. Though he was in sore need of such rude comforts as the town stood prepared to afford him, his demeanor toward it was that of one who suffers an indignity rather than begs accommodation.

And now, as the car crawled to a pause before the Mountain house—Mesquite's one caravanserai—and Mesquite itself, to the last flea-bitten hound, gathered round to view this wonder, Mr. Trine's indignation and chagrin distilled words of poisonous import.

Far from resenting this, Mesquite, pipe in mouth, hands in pockets, admired and applauded, and rather resented the change that befell when two other strangers (whose earlier appearance in town had helped make that one day memorable beyond all others in Mesquite's history) charged out of the Mountain house and interrupted the elder devil with cries of greeting and jubilation.

The leader of these answered to the name of Marrophat; his companion was a person named Jimmy. Mesquite acquired this information through paying close attention to the substance of their communications with the cripple. More than this, however, it learned little. Something seemed to have been accomplished by the two, something that was highly gratifying to Seneca Trine; for he was chuckling almost mirthfully when lifted from the car and carried into the hotel.

What passed between the trio after they disappeared behind that bedchamber door Mesquite could by no means guess. But that a celebration of some sort was in progress was evidenced by the frequency with which Marrophat and Jimmy called on the bar for more liquid refreshment.

And toward midnight one belated Mesquite paused in the street outside the Mountain house for one last curious stare at the lighted windows of Mr. Trine's quarters.

He saw, clearly silhouetted against the glowing oblong of the window, the Mephistophelean profile of Seneca Trine, distorted with a grimace of the cruellest joy that ever heart of man conceived. He saw Marrophat approach his master with a drunken swagger and a speech which, though indistinguishable to the unlearned auditor, unquestionably afforded both of the other men ample excuse for ecstatic glee. Toward its conclusion Mr. Marrophat apparently capped the peak of jubilation by fumbling in his coat pocket and bringing forth something which strongly resembled a single playing card.

Now when he had contrived to master his mirth, the cripple made a gesture which eloquently abolished this card, a gesture which said quite plainly: "All that is finished. The thing has served its purpose! To hell with it!"

Whereupon, with a smart jerk of his wrist, Mr. Marrophat sent the card spinning and sailing out through the open window to lose itself in the night.

The watcher didn't see it fall, and though he spent an unconscionable time searching for it in the deep dust of the roadway, he went his way in the end with curiosity unsated. Fate had reserved that card for a higher purpose.

Undisturbed, it lay where it had fallen, face upward, not a dozen feet from the front door of the Mountain house, until another day dawned on Mesquite.

Then, in the clear light of that dawn, four more strangers straggled into town—two weary and haggard men, two footsore and bedraggled women. One of these last was dressed in a suit of man's clothing, much the worse for wear.

At sight of the Mountain house the party betrayed slight symptoms of a more cheerful spirit; rejoicing in its promise of food and drinks and beds, withal wherein to sleep, the four quickened their steps.

But of a sudden one of the women—she who wore the garments of her sex—paused, uttered a low cry, a-thrill with terror, and clutching the arm of the man nearest her, pointed down to the card that stared up from the dust at her feet.

It was a Trey of hearts.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Full Flight.

"Oh, what can it mean?" Rose whispered brokenly, clinging to her lover's arm. "Surely you don't think . . . Surely, it must be accidental . . . Surely it can't mean—"

"I'm afraid it does," Alan Law responded gravely, eyeing the front of the Mountain house. "Our luck holds consistently—that's all. It wouldn't be us if we didn't pick out the one place where Marrophat and Jimmy would stop over night. Fortunately, it's early; I doubt they're up. With half a show we ought to be able to find some way of putting a good distance between us and this town before they waken . . . Tom!"

But Mr. Barcus was already at his elbow, in thorough sympathy with Alan's interpretation of the significance to be attached to the card that trembled in Rose's hand.

"Sharp's the word!" he agreed. "And there's a motor car over there, in front of the blacksmith's. Probably we can hire her—"

"Trine's car!" Alan ejaculated, swinging round and recognizing the automobile at a glance. "Then he's here, as well!"

"Looks like it," Barcus admitted. "But so much the better. Well, just naturally take the darn thing off his hands, and I'll bet a dollar there isn't another car within a radius of fifty miles! We'll be well out of these sticky mountains long before he finds anything to chase us with."

But his confidence was demonstrated to be premature by the discovery, which rewarded the first cursory examination, that the car was very thoroughly out of commission.

Two minutes later, however, their earnest inquiries elicited the fact that, although Barcus was justified in his surmise that the neighboring country was poverty-stricken in respect of motor cars, Mesquite itself boasted two motorcycles whose owners were not indifferent to a chance to sell them second-hand at a considerable advance on the retail list price of the machines, when new.

And thus it was that within ten minutes from Rose's discovery of that chance-fung warning in the dust, the party was again in rapid motion.

His beauty sleep disturbed by the departure of the machine bearing Barcus and Judith, Seneca Trine roused on an elbow and looked out of the window just in time to see the second motorcycle gathering momentum, Alan steering, Rose in the seat behind.

Sixty seconds later a flaming banner of dust was all that remained to remind Mesquite that romance had passed that way—that, and a series of passionate screams emanating from the bedchamber of Seneca Trine, where the cripple lay possessed by seven devils of insensate rage.

His screams brought attendance; but it was a matter of many precious minutes before his demands could be met and Marrophat and Jimmy roused from their capricious slumbers in adjoining chambers; and half an hour elapsed before the chauffeur, roused from his own well-earned rest, succeeded in convincing the pair that pursuit with the motor car was out of the question.

But the devil takes care of his own; within another half hour what seemed to be a sheer bull-headed, dumb luck brought a casual automobile to Mesquite—a two-seater, the latest and speediest pattern, driven by two irresponsible wayfarers who proved only too susceptible to Marrophat's offer of double the cost of the car—f o b Detroit—for its immediate surrender.

The two piled out promptly enough; Marrophat and Jimmy jumped in; Trine from his bedroom window sped them on their murderous mission with a blast of blasphemy.

It must have been an hour later when Alan, checking his motorcycle as it surmounted the summit of a long upgrade, looked back and discovered, several miles distant on the far-flung windings of the mountain road, a small crimson shape that ran like a mad thing tirelessly pursued by a cloud of tawny dust like a gold on ghost.

A motor car, beyond all question, and one of uncommon road-devouring quality; it might or might not contain Marrophat and Jimmy, once more in pursuit. Whether or not bitter experience had long since educated Alan in the gentle art of taking no chances.

Though it was his life that they sought so pertinaciously, no later than yesterday (and then by no means for the first time), they had proved that if Rose were with Alan they would include her ruthlessly in whatever scheme they might contemplate for his personal extermination.

Nor would Tom Barcus be exempt, though Judith might be, in view of Marrophat's infatuation for the girl. These two were far ahead, out of sight, indeed; and must somehow be overtaken and warned—no easy matter, since the machine which bore them was, if anything, faster than Alan's, just as the racing automobile was faster than either.

Alan kept his gaze steadfast to the road before them, daring not once to look up and round or back.

So sinuous and meandering was its course, indeed, that Alan seldom could see a hundred yards of it ahead, but must peep on in panic flight, hoping for the best—that Judith and Barcus would soon show up in front, that something might happen to hinder the pursuit—never knowing whether the latter lost or gained.

And thus catastrophe befell! Round the swelling bosom of a wooded mountainside the motorcycle swept, like a hunted hare, and without the least warning came upon Barcus and Judith, dismounted, Barcus bending over his cycle and tinkering with its motor.

For one horripilating instant collision seemed unavoidable. Barcus and Judith, and the motorcycle occupied most of the width of the road, there was little room between them and the forest. To try to pass them on the latter side would be only to dash his brains out against the trees; while to make the attempt on the outside would be to risk leaving the road altogether and dashing off into space . . .

And it was impossible to stop the cycle—so brief was all his warning. In desperation Alan chose the outside—the road, and in the space of a single heartbeat thought that he might possibly make it, but with the next realized that he would not—seeing the front wheel swing off over the lip of the slope.

At this he acted sharply and upon sheer instinct. As the cycle left the road altogether he risked a broken knee by releasing his grasp of the handlebars and straightening out his leg and driving it down forcibly against the roadbed. The effect of this was to lift him bodily from the saddle, the machine shot from beneath him like some strange projectile, buried from the bore of a great gun, and Rose clashed against him in the same fraction of a second.

Headlong they plunked as one do the hillside, struck its shelving face a pool twenty feet from the brink of the road, and flying apart tumbled their separate ways down the mainder of the drop and into a friendly shelter of the underbrush.

Something nearly miraculous saved them whole. Beyond a few scratches and bruises and a severe shaking, they escaped unharmed. And they were picking themselves up and regaining their breath and recollecting their scattered wits when, with impetus no less terrific than their own had been, the pursuing motor car swung round the bend and hurtled itself directly at the two who remained upon the road above.

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEY

Take a tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder Bothers.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salt; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders. Jad Salt is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

WITHERING DEATH OF FRENCH GUNS

if by simultaneous thunder-booms, reminding one of nothing so much as the wholesale extinctions of the populations of Herculaneum and Pompeii.
Such an account sounds mysterious. Were the Germans killed where they stood by violent and over-powering, poisonous fumes? Is that the "Great Secret?" Continuing the correspondent says:

"On the borders of one of the forests, a company of Prussian infantry at bivouac is laid out as if it was surprised by the fire. Two sentries are still grasping their rifles and a little way off a messenger lies by himself.
"Further on an officer lies a few yards from his men, who are stretched out with loosened belts and lying in their blankets. Two of them still hold playing cards in their hands.
"Those sleeping and those who were awake when they died evidently were swept out of life together without apparently having had time to move."

The same thing is noticeable on other battle fields in France, say various writers but not one of them has made any attempt to explain the matter. Evidently, when the French talked about their "great secret" they had in mind something worth talking about. Is the mysterious "withering death" of their three-inch field guns the "secret?" Apparently the results, and the comments of observers, would indicate as much.

The Germans, according to all accounts, were killed in some way other than by bullets or fragments of shells. They have been smothered to death, evidently by powerful concussion, or have been asphyxiated by powerful deadly gas.

Recording further instances of apparently mysterious deaths among the Germans, the correspondent says: "Even more extraordinary is another group of sixty dead lying about a small haystack as if in sleep, their rifles stacked and their knapsacks arranged in orderly heaps."

"In the outer ring the path of the shells can be traced in a direct line by heaps of bodies, but the particular shell that killed these sixty struck them in front, from behind, and at the sides with the same sudden death and yet none of them bears any outward wound. Then they are stretched face downward or staring up at the sky, seemingly paralyzed by the mere force of the explosion."

"The same mysterious results were seen in many of the trenches where Germans were piled in rows. The German army to the east and north of Rheims was stated to be strongly entrenched in deep cuttings, with non-proof shelters and rest houses underground and very similar ones were found at Metz, behind the Ourcq. One of these was a mile and a quarter long with tunnels in all directions yet it was filled with dead."

"Along the whole length of the battle line, according to all the stories of French artillery men, Germans never were able to stand before the fire of the French guns whenever it found them out, but latterly as soon as a French battery opened, a hasty retreat was quickly followed by heavy bombardment by big calibre German artillery far out of range."

"That the Germans are beginning to feel discouraged is gathered from letters seized and statements made by officer prisoners. A lieutenant of the Twenty-sixth Artillery regiment writes, the Tenth Corps has been fighting incessantly since the beginning of the campaign. Almost all our horses were gone. We had been under fire from 5 A. M. to 8 P. M. without food or drink. The French Artillery fire was terrific. I am so worn out that I can hardly sit on a horse even at a walk. Even at night our sleep cannot rest. A French machine gun night threw four bombs, three of which killed and wounded twenty horses and four men. We got no letters."
"An officer of the Prussian guard says, 'My regiment started with sixty officers and only five are left out of more than 2,000 men. The regiment is a mere relic.'"

CLEARFIELD H. S. WINS FROM THE DUBOIS ELEVEN

Clearfield has every right to feel exceedingly proud of its 1914 high school football team. A great many citizens have felt that way for some time, but just now they feel doubly so, for on Saturday, at the Driving Park, the local boys administered a decisive defeat to Dubois high, the first gridiron contest between the schools to be won by C. H. S. in almost a decade and a half. The score was 13-0. There was not a single unpleasant incident to mar the glory of the victory, the decisions of the officials and the conduct of players and spectators being exceedingly satisfactory to the management of both teams.

Owing to the ancient rivalry between the two towns represented and the fact that this game marked the renewal of athletic relations between the schools after a three-year period of estrangement, the crowd at the game was the largest of the season. Ideal football weather prevailed.

As to the game itself, it was, in the opinion of those who have been following the local team, the slowest and the best game of football ever witnessed in Clearfield. Every inch of ground gained by either side was secured only after strenuous playing which at all times was aggressive, but never unnecessarily rough.

During the first period the ball exchanged hands several times, but neither side was able to advance it within striking distance of the opponents' goal. It was not until late in the second period that Clearfield after several times rushing the ball to the Dubois 15 yard line sent Ed, crashing through the line for the first score of the game. McQuillen failed to kick the goal.

The second touchdown for the local boys came in the third period when after rushing the ball down the field on tackle backs and end runs, Trip Stewart tore through the Dubois line and placed the ball behind the goal posts. W. Flegel kicked the goal, making the score 13-0.

The local team then played the game for all that was in them, and so can hardly be said that anyone did better than another. The team went into the game confident that they were a better team, and this mental attitude went a long way toward winning the victory, and proving beyond a doubt that they were champions of Clearfield county and contenders for championship honors of the section.

The team which represented Dubois was one of the strongest and strongest ever turned out by the school and went into the game confident of winning, even making boast that they would score at least 75 points.

WAR WIND BLOWS GOOD TO AMERICA IN THE SHAPE OF ORDERS OF GOODS

Shoes and Other Supplies Demanded of Us by Fighting Nations.

Trouble With Us Is That We Are Too Rich, Says Thomas A. Edison.

THE trouble with us is that we are too rich; too many of us have so much money we wouldn't know what to do with more if we had it. That's why we haven't more readily grasped the opportunities offered us through the European war." This was the opinion expressed by Thomas A. Edison in an interview in Cleveland.

At the same time there appeared in the New York Times articles showing orders given in America for war supplies and other materials by the warring nations of Europe. Some of the biggest of these are given here:

New England manufacturers of shoes have already booked orders for 2,200,000 pairs for export to the European belligerents. Negotiations are under way for further orders, but some manufacturers hesitate because the profit is hard to calculate.

France, which has already placed large orders, desires additional boots for her soldiers. These must be made by hand, and it is a question as to how expensive the bootmaking process will be. One manufacturer has installed special machinery for this purpose.

A company which received an order for 200,000 pairs for France recently has had the order increased to 500,000 pairs. It is debating whether to increase its facilities and accept an order for 1,000,000 pairs of boots. Another company is making 500,000 pairs of boots for Greece.

Boom in Leather Also.

There is a corresponding boom in leather. One company, with an annual turnover of $10,000,000, is running its factories day and night at 125 per cent capacity. Before the war it was running at 40 per cent capacity. Most of the leather is for England and to be made into boots there for the army. So far England has bought no boots in the United States, but is expected to place orders soon. Its demand for leather has put up the price 4 to 6 cents a foot.

Twenty thousand additional head of horses are to be purchased in Missouri and southern Illinois by agents of the British, French and Russian governments, according to reports in live stock circles in St. Louis. It is said that the agents of the various governments have been instructed to make the purchases.

A uniform price of $270 is being paid for each horse.

The French agents also have bought 100,000 barrels of flour and great quantities of other provisions in St. Louis, and orders have been placed with local shoe factories for thousands of pairs of shoes.

Germany Buys Horses.

The German government is said to be offering $500 to $800 a head for horses delivered in Germany.

War orders for clothing, trucks, harness, tinners' tools, and the like in the Chicago and neighboring markets amount to between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000, and purchasing agents of the British and French governments are still buying. England has $3,000,000 gold in a Chicago bank to be used for purchases. The meat packers have enough European orders on hand to keep them running full time for a year.

The opposing governments have agents watching the purchases of each other in this market. They begin by apparently sincere correspondence about prices and quantities, but their queries invariably lead to details of transportation. With this information their warships are kept on the lookout for shipments to hostile governments.

From Hartford, Conn., within a few weeks, 1,700 machine lathes of moderate capacity, such as twelve to four feet in diameter, have been shipped to Europe. One thousand more of these lathes are required, the whole to cost $1,500,000. The order will exhaust the present stock of such lathes in the United States. Arms and cartridge plants are working overtime on machine guns, pistols and ammunition, and these eventually find their way to Europe, though the manufacturers deal only with their regular American agents.

The effect of the war upon Pacific coast staples is shown in a tabulation prepared in San Francisco by the chamber of commerce.

Barley this year was a bumper crop. The exports from San Francisco for the last three months reached the unprecedented total of 3,785,452 quintals, an amount against 3,321,911 for the corresponding period in 1913.

For canned fruits the figures are 180,000 cases this year, against 123,000 in 1913, and for canned salmon the tally stands 100,061 cases this year, 60,808 cases last year.

Big Order For Canned Meats.

An order for 100,000 cases of canned meats, valued at $1,000,000, to go to Europe, has been received by the packing company of Oklahoma City. Additional orders for dry salt pork amount to more than the supply on hand.

While admitting the existing situation in the iron and steel trade, due to the war in Europe, Judge F. H. McFarland, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel corporation, addressing the American Iron and Steel Institute, in session in Birmingham, Ala., declared himself an optimist and predicted a rapid recovery and improvement in the next three months.

Further, he declared that this country, with its vast wealth and resources, should become the financial industrial

TURKEY STRONG ON BLACK SEA

Her Fleet on Inland Ocean Outweighs Russia's.

HAS ARMY OF MILLION.

Ottomans' Entry Into War May Bring About New Alignment of Powers, With Probabilities in Favor of Allies. Turkey Has Long Been Favorable to the German Side.

The initial advantage on the Black sea apparently lies with Turkey in the opening of hostilities against Russia, according to observers. In addition to the battle cruiser Goeben, which has attained a speed of 27.2 knots and is one of the most formidable craft afloat, and the protected cruiser Breslau of a 26.9 knot record, Turkey has in the Black sea two battleships of Dreadnought class, four pre-Dreadnoughts, two swift cruisers and numerous destroyers and gunboats, many of them bought from Germany. This fleet includes these battleships:

Reshad-i-Hamit, 23,000 tons, 20 knots.

Birezi Osman, 27,000 tons, 22 knots, bought from Brazil.

Khyer-ed-din Barbarossa and Torgut Reis, 8,000 tons each, 17 knots, formerly German battleships, and two others of the same type.

Two cruisers, the Hamidieh and the Medjidieh, 3,500 tons, 22 knots.

Russia's Black Sea Fleet.

Russia's Black sea fleet consists of six pre-Dreadnought battleships, one protected cruiser, two armored gunboats and a number of old torpedo boats and gunboats.

Three Dreadnoughts are under construction, but may not be in commission for months.

If Portugal be counted, Turkey is the eleventh nation to be involved in the great European struggle. Her participation has been expected for weeks, and diplomats now say that Greece, Roumania and Bulgaria are likely to be added, and possibly Italy.

Notwithstanding the warnings of the allies, it has been deemed inevitable that Turkey would yield to German influence and join against Russia. Since the opening of the war 600 German officers have arrived in Turkey, as well as a large quantity of munitions of war, including some of the big siege guns. German guns were mounted in the Dardanelles forts and a German officer, Weber Pasha, placed in command. All the fortifications of the Bosphorus and the Asia Minor coast have been overhauled and mines have been sown in Greek waters.

Lineup Will Favor Allies.

If the entrance of Turkey into the conflict emboldens Italy and the other Balkan states, as expected, it will bring 3,871,000 additional men into battle, as well as three more navies. In this event the line up will probably be in favor of the allies.

Turkey, with an army on war footing figured at approximately 1,000,000, and a navy of thirty-five warships manned by 31,000 men, will thus contribute 1,031,000 men to the German cause.

The allies will profit to the extent of 210 warships and a total of 2,340,000 men contributed as follows: Italy—Army, 1,200,000; navy, 169 ships manned by 80,000. Greece—Army, 150,000; navy, forty-one ships, manned by 30,000. Bulgaria—Army, 350,000, and Roumania, army, 500,000. About Bulgaria's future moves there is much doubt, as she is still bitter against her enemies in the recent Balkan war, and she may join Turkey.

Doubt About Goeben and Breslau.

Turkey mobilized her army early in August, supposedly with the moral support of the German government. It was thought the forces would be employed against Greece for the recovery of territory lost in the Balkan war. Greece bought the battleships Missisippi and Idaho from the United States, and to offset this Turkey purchased ostensibly two ships from Germany, the Goeben and Breslau, which sought refuge from the allied fleet in the Mediterranean. There has been some doubt, however, that there was a bona fide purchase, for it has been reported that these ships, although flying the German flag, retained their German crews and officers.

Tremendous pressure was brought by German advisers to induce Turkey to abandon the plans against Greece and take the field against Russia. The staggering cost of outfitting the mobilization raised a political storm and the minister of war and his party were put on the defensive. The action of the entente powers threatening dire consequences if Turkey declared war followed by German setbacks in Russia, Belgium and France, finally forced a demobilization.

Russia anticipated Turkey's violation of neutrality. Nearly two weeks ago the archives of the Russian embassy were transferred to Odessa.

If a Girl Wants a Career She Must Get Out and Work, Not Study All Her Life

Oliver Morosco, who is a maker of stars, says girls win success only through experience.

Get into the sausage machine and work; don't be an amateur all your life, is his advice.

THIS story has nothing whatever to do with the war. It is about a girl and her opportunities. When a girl is seventeen, intelligent, pretty and alive to the chances of life, she must beware of the music-roll habit. Statistics show that more girls wear out their glove fingers against a music roll than against any other recognized implement of trade. In other words, when Minnie has finished school and a career seems desirable, the family remembers how sweetly Minnie led the class song at commencement, and "has her voice cultivated."

The fact that Minnie studies with at least five music teachers, yet never gets beyond a parlor rendering of "The Rosary," proves to Oliver Morosco, theatre owner, manager, producer and manufacturer of dramatic material, that Minnie makes the mistake of becoming a "chronic student" when she might become a star in the permanent heaven of work and prosperity.

Being "Moroscoed."

Out Los Angeles way, they have coined a verb. "To be Moroscoed." Being "Moroscoed" means, briefly, being heard, analyzed as to fitness, appraised dramatically and started in the kindergarten of the Morosco "school."

The next news the eastern states hear of the Moroscoed product is when it appears in electric letters on Broadway thus: "Oliver Morosco presents Minnie Blank in So-and-So."

And New York hugs itself, chuckdown from heaven, ready-made and resplendent. They win success through the sausage machine of work and experience.

"Give a girl the fundamentals—youth, reasonable good looks, ambition, alertness, sensibility, temperament, and the manufacturing manager can make a star of her."

"The average girl who seeks success through the stereotyped avenue of music study must have these qualities too. Even more so, I should say, than the girl who would be an actress."

"The difference is here: A girl can be nursed along by half a dozen voice specialists, one after another, each with a different and promising method, and get nowhere. A girl cannot be fed into the mill of stage work in a manufacturing plant such as we have out in Los Angeles, without becoming a definite product with a definite value."

"The 'manufacturer of theatrical stars' does not make teaching his end. It is but a means to an end. His aim is production, not mere training for somebody else to realize on."

Marketing Minnie.

"I believe the stage offers to-day the greatest field for the woman who wants to earn a splendid living and develop her talents to their utmost."

For Minnie's benefit, we will here quote a few Morosco facts: The Morosco theatre in Los Angeles comprises two—the Burbank and the Morosco—where original productions are made; the Majestic, where the big travelling stars play; the Lyceum, where a resident stock company employing a large force is primed to take hold of any sort of drama that may be contemplated, and another odd playhouse or two where tryouts of various kinds can be made.

By the time Minnie has been fed through this machinery she has found herself. If she stands all the tests she finally finds herself on Broadway. If she measures up, say 75 per cent, perfect, she goes into some one of the dozen road companies of the Morosco circuit. Or a comfortable, well-paying berth at the "home" theatre in Los Angeles. Or is held in reserve for some of the score of plays that are always being worked into shape from the manuscripts of the new writers.

Good Chance for Minnie.

And, by the way, there are now eight "Peg o' My Heart" companies skittering over the country, employing approximately 125 persons, two "Help Wanted" companies, say 40 people more, and a "Bird of Paradise" troupe, add another 25. Multiply these figures by the number of other managers' productions and you begin to realize the big demand for the clever little actresses against the smallness of demand for operatic stars.

In short, it looked to me before I left the Morosco office as if Minnie had a pretty good chance to earn a living on the stage and a pretty poor one by contracting the habit of the threadbare music roll.

How to Be a Star.

"Stars," he continued, "are much like business men. They do not drop

Items of Interest, Gathered Here and There, For The Boys Who Man The Trains

PRESIDENT OF B. R. & P. LOOKS ON BRIGHT SIDE

President William T. Noonan, of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh railway, is not looking for further business depression. He sees promise of business for his railway and other railways, if there is right co-operation among all interests. Mr. Noonan and the board of directors last week inspected all the trackage of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh railway. Speaking of the conditions he said: "Business is not active, but we are trying to find employment for as many men as possible. Our improvement work for this year is nearing completion. Unless business gets much worse than it is, and I do not believe it will—we expect to continue next year our policy of improvement and expansion."

"We continue to believe that a sound principle to follow is for every one to do as much as possible instead of sit idle, and not to become unduly alarmed over the present temporary depression in the volume of business."

Mr. Noonan's ideas on the present and future business conditions are substantiated by the monthly financial letter of the Lincoln National bank of Rochester, which is quoted in part as follows: "We are not on the eve, but really in the midst of a material improvement in business, and although some business must still suffer because of the European conflict and other unsatisfactory conditions, the largest portion of the business world and the majority of lines will show improvement from this time on, partly because of the war and partly because business depression has lasted as long as it can."

"Just now 'boom talks' are being talked, and such talk should be frowned upon, because it leads to extravagances and causes too strong an anticipation of possible business. Over extension of credit and over-borrowing should be carefully avoided, but the times are propitious in most lines for a good strong pull with every promise of a material increase in business and profits."

DU BOIS ACORN CLUB VOTES TO BECOME "WET"

At a meeting of the Acorn club, in DuBois, called for the purpose of voting on a resolution to amend the constitution so as to exclude the serving of intoxicating liquors at functions given by the club, twenty-two members, leading citizens and business men of DuBois, resigned when the club voted "wet."

The Acorn club has no sideboard and has always been almost "dry." At the annual banquet, and perhaps three times yearly, liquors have been served. This is the second refusal made to do away with serving liquor by the club.

Twenty-two men who resigned are churchmen of DuBois and gave as their reasons that they could not consistently be members of a club that serves liquor and live up to their pretensions in the church.

The program includes the following:

Wednesday—Conference and enrollment of officers and delegates.

Organization of convention; addresses; reports of district corresponding secretaries; annual report of mission supplies; annual report of treasurer.

Evening—Young people's rally; special program; address by Mrs. Annie Hobbs Woodcock.

Thursday—Reports of conference department secretaries.

Evening—"History Sketch of the Central Pennsylvania Conference Woman's Home Missionary Society," by Mrs. John S. Bursk, Carlisle.

Friday—"Inspiration Features of J. Work."

Conference W. H. M. S. Work in J. Work.

HIS LIFE SAVED BY A CRUCIFIX

proaching Germans would have been robbed of an easy entry into the allies' territory.

One of the officers on the ill-fated Cressy which was sunk by the German submarines was severely injured on the head, had both his legs broken and his feet crushed as he was thrown into the air by the explosion. His body was sucked under the water by the sinking cruiser, but was picked up by one of the rescue ships.

Twenty-four hours afterwards the injured officer regained consciousness and his first words were, "Are we downhearted? No!"

Honor for a Sergeant

A sergeant of the line was made adjutant for his coolness and bravery in an engagement, in Louvain. With three men the sergeant was left across an open field to attack the hox of the Germans so the colonel could tell where the enemy's trenches were and what their probable strength was. A hail of bullets was directed at the four men. They made their way to a small farmhouse where they climbed up on a tile roof and from the shelter of a chimney began firing at the Germans. Angered by the impudence of the four soldiers the Germans directed one of their batteries on the house and razed it.

"My smartest patrol leader is gone," the colonel remarked, as he saw the building crumbling. The three privates were no more, but the little sergeant was seen running across the field toward his command. When the sergeant arrived breathless at headquarters the colonel asked with much severity why he did not "try to continue the line."

"Sorry sir, but the pigs knocked my house down," was the reply.

SKELETON OF UNKNOWN FOUND NEAR PENITENT

The skeleton of a man was found on Sullivan Hill, near Penitents on Saturday by a party of hunters. Nothing but the bones remained and Oscar A. Polham and Dr. Lewis, of Clearfield are of the opinion that the man had been dead for at least two years.

A bullet was found where the waist of the dead man would be and the supposition is that he had been murdered. Nothing was found among the effects by which the man could be identified. It is supposed that the man was of middle age.

GERMANS EXPECT ATTACK ON ANTWERP

TAKE EVERY PRECAUTION TO PREVENT INVASION

Allies are Evidently Planning to Recapture the Belgian City

MASSING TROOPS ON NORTH SEA COAST

Kaiser's Forces Making Violent Bayonet Charges in an Attempt to recapture the French Artillery in the Argonne Region—German Trenches in the Region of Verdun Have Been Captured by the French—Berlin Reports That the Germans Have Gained Ground and Have Captured Several Positions Southeast of St. Mihiel.

(By International News Service.)

Paris, Nov. 7.—While the Germans make violent attacks near Ypres and north of Arras, the allies are massing great forces on the North Sea coast for a vigorous offensive movement.

It is evident the allies hope to push past Ostend and recapture Antwerp. The Germans are making violent bayonet attacks at Argonne to recapture the French artillery, which causes heavy loss in the trenches.

German Fear Attack

Amsterdam, via London, Nov. 7.—A despatch to the Telegraph from Rosendaal says that all trains arrived there from Antwerp are full of fugitives. One of the fugitives declared that not a single German officer slept in Antwerp Thursday night, all being housed in the forts.

The correspondent adds that a proclamation issued at Antwerp Thursday threatened to imprison all citizens found on the streets after 9 o'clock at night.

"Machine guns have been mounted at the railway station and the impression prevails that the Germans fear their occupation of Antwerp is not secure," the correspondent concludes.

German Attacks Repulsed

Paris, Nov. 7.—It is overtly announced that the Germans are still violently attacking in the northern sphere. Two vigorous attacks, one on the Labasse canal and the other southeast of Ypres, Belgium, have been repulsed by British and French troops.

Germans south of Nieupoort have made several counter attacks upon the Belgians, but timely reinforcements enabled the latter to hold their position.

North Sea Open to Neutrals

(By International News Service.)

Copenhagen, Nov. 7.—In reply to queries from the Danish government, the British admiralty has transmitted the following information relative to facilities for Danish shipping in the North Sea:

"Scandinavian-American lines, as well as Danish steamers, are permitted to the Faroe Islands will be permitted to follow the usual routes with very little change. Closing the North Sea for war purposes does not mean trespassing on the rights of neutral shipping."

INTERESTING MEETING OF COUNTY W. C. T. U.

An interesting meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held in Y. M. C. A. yesterday evening. Subjects of interest were discussed and acted upon.

Most interesting, however, to the members was the state convention report by County President Mrs. S. Canfield Wilson. Old City was most cordial in her welcome and endorsement of the delegates, representing the temperance army of the women of the state, which has now reached 37,329, gain over 7000 in the year. They aim to reach 50,000 in 1915. The membership in Clearfield county has reached 650, the gain in DuBois alone being 200 in the year. Great temperance sentiment is being manifested throughout the county. Luzerne county has the largest gain in a year, reaching 1200. Clearfield stands first in flower department and is good in different lines.

President Mrs. Ella M. George, of Beaver Falls, was reelected, and all of general officers excepting Mr. Elmer M. Preston, general secretary, of L. T. L. The convention will be held on November 14th, 15th and 16th, at the Y. M. C. A. in Atlanta, Georgia.

County President Mrs. S. Canfield Wilson and Mrs. A. E. McNair, of Curwensville, leave on Monday for the national W. C. T. U. convention in Atlanta, Georgia.

Praise for Miss Mitchell

Miss Mary Mitchell, also of Clearfield, revealed a soprano voice of unusual quality and of great range, and in her singing song proved herself an artist of unusual ability. Her selections were "Song of the Sea" and "The Swallow." Mr. Horton, in his highly cultivated musical training, accomplished with extremely fine technique.

"THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY" PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE

The play given at the opera house last evening by the local high school was a treat to the audience and a credit to the school. The plot was full of life and vigor and the actors so well prepared that they lived the parts they played.

The part of the hero of the play, Bob Kendrick, was played by Dale Chaplin, of the class of '15, and was well played. The parts of Kendrick by Dale Chaplin, and Mr. Seabury, by Malvin Neff, were well acted and lots of life, was put into the parts. Elmer Kurtz deserves special mention for the vim and dash, that he put into the part of Sullivan, the politician.

Richard Seabury, was played in a creditable manner by William Lietzinger, of the class of '16, and Herbert Brownell the reporter of the Tribune, as played by John Graham, was a live wire in the plot. Howard Steward played the part of J. J. Crosby, the former district attorney, well. Russell Bratton as the office boy and Charles Hoover as the Calvert butler were amusing characters. Inez Wood played the part of Aunt Hattie to perfection, and Elizabeth Zerfass as Dorothy, her niece, put lots of life into her part.

The part of Beverly Calvert, the bride, in the last act, was well played by Catherine Bowers. Margaret Johnson, as Peggy Marshall, and Margaret Ward as Dolly Whitney were typical college girls. Willard Chase did credit to his part as Billy Reynolds, the boy who fell in love with both girls and couldn't decide which and in the end found that it was all an illusion any way, and Grace Connolly played the part of Margaret, the servant, in a delightfully amusing way.

SOUTH AFRICA REVOLTS COMPLETELY CRUSHED

London, Nov. 7.—A Cape Town dispatch declares that the rebellion of General Christian Frederick Beyers in the Western Transvaal and the mutiny of Lieutenant Colonel Solomon Herdhardus Maritz, northwest Cape Town now appear to be completely crushed.

Unofficial reports, according to the dispatch, indicate that something resembling an armistice is being observed. The rebels are still collected at certain points in the northern Free State, but all these points are marked by adequate loyal commandos.

"It is abundantly clear," the dispatch concludes, "that the rebels are ill-equipped and have virtually no organization."

DEATH STALKS IN THE WOODS

List of "Accidents" Among Those Who Go Out to Slay Grows as the Season Advances—Youthful and Inexperienced Gun Toters Authors of Most of Disasters.

Reports from the hunting woods in this state read somewhat like the news from the battle fields in Europe. With a quarter of a million hunters in the woods it is not strange that accidents happen, especially as many of the nimble are youths of tender years and immature brains.

Below are a few of the reports gleaned from state newspapers relative to accidents in the woods:

Arthur Fernays, a young man who resides above Harveys Run, Clearfield county, accidentally shot himself Tuesday evening while out hunting in the woods. Fernays was armed with a double-barreled gun and had just fired and was about to load the other barrel, when the trigger slipped and the gun fired with the result of a bullet striking him in the chest. He was taken to the hospital and is now recovering.

WITHERING DEATH OF FRENCH GUNS

"Great Secret" May Have Been Discovered at Last

DESTRUCTIVENESS OF CANNON

WITHERING DEATH OF FRENCH FIELD GUNS

Entire Sections and Companies of Germans Struck as if by Simultaneous Thunderbolts—Many of the Kaiser's Troops Were Killed Without Showing a Trace of a Wound.

European Manager of the International News Service.

London, Nov. 7.—At the outset of the titanic European war, French writers commenting on the probable fate of the Germans, had much to say of the "great secret" of France as a factor in the struggle. Time and again stories emanating from Paris mentioned the "great secret" and the "mystery" by which their country was to strike down the German hosts.

Not once has there been given an intimation of the nature of the "great secret" or of a London correspondent, writing from Dieppe, after a visit to the gunnery sheds along the Marne, believes that he has found it in the thousands of guns used by the French, which according to the stories, kill the Germans as they advance, killing them, apparently without warning them, and leaving them to be the victims of the most terrible tragedy of the war, the great tragedy of the Marne.

The "great secret" is that the power of the Marne grows the destruction power of the French guns, and that the power of the French guns is the power of the Marne.

DUBOIS MAN ARRESTED ON SERIOUS CHARGE

Charles P. Munch, a well known citizen of DuBois, was arrested on a serious charge yesterday by Deputy United States Marshal Nicholas L. Bogan, of Pittsburg. The information against Mr. Munch was made before United States Commissioner Roger Knox, of Pittsburg, by T. H. Simons, special agent of the department of justice, and charges Mr. Munch with having on the 9th of December, 1913, at DuBois, in violation of Section 30, statute 544, unlawfully and fraudulently concealed $500 a fine assets of the C. P. Munch Coal company, which was then a bankrupt, with intent to defeat the provisions of the act of congress of July 1, 1898, in relation to bankruptcy.

Mr. Munch was at home when the deputy marshal arrived and accompanied the officer, who later took him before United States Commissioner John P. Arnold in the latter's office in the Deposit National bank building. Here Mr. Munch waived a hearing and was admitted to bail in the sum of $2,500 for his appearance at the next term of the United States district court, which meets in Pittsburg on the 9th of November.

Mr. Munch maintains that he is innocent of the charge preferred against him and that at the proper time he will substantiate this fact.

LITTLE GIRL'S FOOT CUT OFF ON TROLLEY LINE

Lillian Deasey, ten years of age, living in Sandy township, near McCarty's crossing of the trolley line, got her right foot caught in the planking of the railway yesterday afternoon, and a trolley car passing over the line cut the foot off. The foot was caught between the rail and the planking and her predicament was not discovered by the motorman until too late to save the girl's foot.

At the DuBois hospital later in the day the little girl's leg was amputated just below the knee, and she is reported to be getting along comfortably.

BUSINESS MEN TO TALK IN OPERA HOUSE SUNDAY

The men's meeting in the opera house will be held at 3:30 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. The speakers will be Joseph Reitz and Arthur Myers, business men of DuBois, and several trail hitters from DuBois. Don't miss this meeting as it will be one of the best. Good singing and a pleasant Sunday afternoon.

There business men deserve a hearty greeting from Clearfield citizens.

Tsiug-Tau Surrendered To Japs And British

(By International News Service.)

Tokyo, Nov. 7.—11:20 A. M. It is officially announced that the German fortress of Tsiug-Tau has surrendered to the Japanese and British. The fortress was one of the last German strongholds in the north of the Shan Tung peninsula of China, and has been under siege since late in August. The fortress was occupied by the main force of the German army in the region, and was a serious threat to the Japanese and British forces.

The fall of Tsiug-Tau is a great victory for the Japanese and British forces, and it is expected that the German army in the region will be completely defeated.

(By International News Service.) Petrograd, Nov. 7.—It was announced today that the enemy is in retreat all along the line, with the Russians following their advantage. The resistance offered by the Germans and Austrians has everywhere been broken.

Russians Retake Jaroslavl Jaroslavl recaptured and 5000 Austrians taken prisoners; a great victory won over the Germans in East Prussia, and the continued pursuit of the retreating Austro-German armies in Poland were the features on the official announcements issued yesterday.

Vigorous War on Turkey London, Nov. 7.—Russia is prosecuting vigorously the war against Turkey. Russian forces have entered Armenia by two routes and several Turkish regiments have been captured. The Russian government asserts that it has sufficient forces independent of those engaged with the Austrians and Germans to cope with the Turks, so that, for the present at least, Turkey's activities are not expected to affect materially the fighting in other fields.

HOSPITAL SUBSCRIPTIONS TO BE PUBLISHED LATER

At a meeting of the hospital campaign committee it was decided that a list of the subscribers to the fund raised to pay off the old debt should be published about the last of November. In order to allow those who have not already subscribed to have their names added to the roll of honor the list will be kept open until November 28. This will also give the outlying towns a chance to get their returns in.

When published the list will be arranged in alphabetical order and each subscriber will receive a copy. It is hoped that by that time all subscriptions will have been paid.

(By International News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 7.—The Japanese embassy today stated that the fleet of the Tsiug-Tau victory would be to take from the base for blockade duty at Tsiug-Tau three naval divisions of four warships each, and these would hasten eastward toward the American coast to give battle to the German fleet that destroyed the English squadron.

Another Hall of political fame has been demolished in the defeat of the Penrose candidate for state senator and the election of the Washington Democratic candidate in the Twenty-sixth district.

One schoolmaster in the White House in a century is quite sufficient, thank you; therefore the suggestion of Dr. Brumbaugh as the Republican candidate in 1916 isn't meeting with much favor.

We suggest that George Bernard Shaw and Herman Ridder fight it out with Krupp guns and cease to weary the American people with their newspaper controversies. It will be noticed that neither of these patriots is on the firing line in Europe.

A committee of suffragists visited the mayor of Philadelphia the other day and scolded him for his alleged failure to do what the women wanted done. The way to kill woman's suffrage movement in this state is to put thoughtless women on committee to interview statesmen.

Republican newspapers of the better class are now advising the next legislature to carry out the pledges given by Dr. Brumbaugh during the campaign. These papers should direct their appeal to the boss of the legislature, Boies Penrose. But Penrose made no pledge—that he intends to keep.

RIDDER'S NEUTRALITY

Herman Ridder, editor of the Staats Zeitung, published in New York city, in an open communication to a clergyman in Ohio, explains why he is trying to convince American citizens that the Kaiser of Germany is entitled to the friendship of neutral nations. Ridder quotes the admission of President Wilson to the people of the United States to maintain neutrality during the European war, and says that the effect of this advice was destroyed by the anti-German sentiment which was fostered by England and which found vent in American newspapers. Ridder is mistaken. The American people made up their minds that the Kaiser was in the wrong when he ordered the destruction of Belgium, and what the newspapers said merely strengthened the belief in the United States that the war must be held responsible for the beginning of the war as he is responsible for the brutality which has attended the conflict. No sane, educated and civilized American could regard with favor the violation by the Kaiser of the pledge he had given that Belgium's neutrality should be respected.

The Zeitung editor says hundreds of thousands of Americans think as he does, which is possible, but there are several millions of Americans who, reading of the ruthless destruction of Belgium, the levying of tribute upon Brussels, the dropping of bombs on towns the inhabitants of which were not engaged in war and by which women and children were killed and other acts of the German Kaiser, disagree with Herr Ridder. These millions of Americans also blame the Kaiser for sending the best manhood of Germany to be slaughtered in a war, the object of which is commercial aggression and spoliation.

A DIVIDED DEMOCRACY

Now that the smoke of the political battle has passed away the two Democratic factions in this state have inaugurated the usual post-election alteration as to which wing of the party played traitor at the polls. The election returns would seem to indicate that a large number of Ryan Democrats voted for Penrose, some of them because they have always been friendly to the Penrose machine, and others because they would not support A. Mitchell Palmer, the Pennsylvania distributor of federal patronage under the present national administration. It is stated that the old guard will endeavor to wrest control of the Democratic party in this state from the reorganizers. The poor showing made by Palmer in the recent election is seized upon by the reactionaries as good and sufficient cause for demanding that the party shall be turned over to them. But as Palmer holds the tickets to the pie counter the effort to oust him from the position of boss of the Democratic party is not likely to prove successful. The Ryan Democrats lack the ammunition to carry on the siege against Palmer's seat.

REV. ROBERT C. PETERS

Of Interest to Workingmen.
For $1,000,000 invested in liquor 77 men are employed; for $1,000,000 invested in iron 238 men are employed; for $1,000,000 invested in the paper industry 367 are employed; $1,000,000 invested in leather calls for 469 men; in textiles, for 578; in lumber, for 579. It is seen, therefore, that the same amount of money invested in productive and constructive industries employs five times as many workmen as does the liquor industry. If the brewery and distillery be converted into bona fide manufacturing, will it hurt or help the community?

Business Helped.

Instead of "hurting business," the nationwide adoption of the liquor trade would help business. The statement is made—and it is net overdrawn—that to "divide the money" now spent in saloons among the twenty leading necessities of life would require to manufacture them $100,000,000 more raw material than is now used in the manufacture of drink, and would give employment to 1,000,000 more men.

No Saloon Money in Theirs.

Writing from Emporia, Kansas, Walt Mason says in Colliers: "It is a favorite claim of the saloon men that they support the schools, their license money usually going to the school fund. The answer to this is that Emporia has just built a high school costing $135,000—which is going some for a town of 10,000 people. All the grade schools are housed in handsome buildings, the best teachers obtainable are hired, and none of them has to sue for his wages."

VICTOR OVER AMBASSADOR GERARD IN RACE FOR SENATE CHAIR.

James W. Wadsworth, Jr., first U. S. senator from New York elected by direct vote of the people. Senator-elect Wadsworth was the Republican nominee and his victory over U. S. Ambassador to Germany Gerard was a big surprise to the political prophets.

"Peg O' My Heart"
There are few dramatic offerings that can boast of a two years continuous run on Broadway, but "Peg O' My Heart," in which Doris Moore is now appearing for her second year is one of these. "Peg O' My Heart" will be the attraction at the New opera house on Friday evening. This is a play that has a plausible story in which laughter and tears are deftly mingled and has also, for its central character, one of the sweetest heroines. "Peg" is an unspoiled, irresponsible bit of a girl who chance throws in the way of a haughty, unnatural family. They are so unlike her that she is made very unhappy, but in the last act, through the man who has won her love, her smiles return. Seats now on sale.

Good Roads Congress to Meet at Atlanta, Ga.

(By International News Service)

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 9.—About five thousand men interested in good roads are here today for the sessions of the fourth American Road congress, which will continue throughout the week. There was a large amount of enthusiasm observable about the places where the delegates congregated. Probably no state was not represented. Atlanta has made elaborate arrangements for entertaining her visitors. The city has been decorated at great expense.

Forty-seven national and state road associations are taking part in the congress, prominent being the American Highway association, the American Automobile association, the American Banker's association and the national civil service reform league.

Many railroads have put on special trains for the congress and the good roads of Georgia have been tested by hundreds of motor cars bearing the delegates here.

Besides the addresses and discussions there are many social features and exhibitions covering 40,000 square feet of floor space. The U. S. government exhibit comprises accurate models of every type of road from the imperial roads of ancient Rome to the modern boulevard and county market road.

Among those expected to address the congress are Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern railway; L. W. Page, director of the U. S. office of public roads; U. S. Senator J. H. Bankhead; Representative Dorsey W. Shackelford; Representative Wm. P. Borland, and many state commissioners of highways.

This afternoon Governor and Mrs.

Stanton gave a reception in the Georgia state capital to the delegates, visitors and their families. All the Atlanta clubs are keeping open house for the delegates.

This is the first meeting of the American Road congress in the South and is a recognition of the great energy and progress that has been made in that section in the movement for improved roads. In 1912, about $40,000,000 was expended by southern states on their public roads, in addition to the labor of thousands of state convicts. Georgia alone had her entire convict force numbering nearly 5,000 engaged in road construction.

The tremendous importance of guarding against extravagance in road expenditures is shown by the fact that while a recent report of the census bureau indicates that the total bonded debt of the 48 states last year was $419,157,000, in the single year of 1912 the states spent about $132,000,000 on roads. The total indebtedness had been accumulating for years, and yet in one year an amount equal to about one-third was spent on roads. This subject will be dealt with exhaustively at the congress.

One of the principal results hoped for by the management of the congress will be the establishment of state railway departments in the six southern states, which have thus far failed to adopt the plan of state supervision, namely Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, Mississippi and Texas. Aside from these six states only Indiana and Montana have failed to establish state highway departments for educational or constructive work.

Henderson's Corsets

Are Good Every Day of the Year and for Every Occasion

Hardly a day passes that we do not receive some favorable comment in regard to these corsets and it is the verdict of the ladies of Clearfield and vicinity that no better or more stylish corsets can be secured for the money. Women of discretion buy corsets where the stock comprises many different models, for so doing they know they can be properly fitted to a model that will suit their individual figure.

Our stock of Henderson Back and Front Laced Corsets is unusually complete and includes all of the various seasonable models.

We call your special attention to Henderson Corset, Style 504, which is unquestionably one of the newest and most stylish designs that has been offered this season. It is made of coutil, has a medium low bust, without boning over hips and is so designed to give the new natural figure lines so much in vogue. An undeniably handsome garment that appeals to every woman of excellent dress attainments. Made for average figures.

Good evening! Don't keep your smiles for your friends; give some to your family.

How many men voted as they went?

Ohio went for rum and the Republican party.

Are you still buying goods sold in Clearfield?

If you made a freak election bet, pay it promptly.

Clearfield has not had a fire in four months, a record worth feeling proud over.

However, it will be useless to expect to see a revival of business right away at once.

Read the Progress if you want to keep in touch with what is going on in this old world.

More man may be prepared for almost anything in the way of women's fashions this winter.

With the German and English warships, it looks as if the one dassent and the other is afraid.

And now they have gone and chosen a provisional governor of Mexico whose name is unpronounceable.

Two more states have granted women the right to vote—but they are not east of the Mississippi river.

The wounds borne by the members of the local Democratic factions have not been healed by the election.

The man who loves rabbit potpie can laugh at the prediction that meat will be higher in price this winter.

After all, the war will not be so bad if it results in the driving of the unspeakable Turk out of Europe.

There should be a law prohibiting some men from letting their muffled cut-outs wide open when they talk politics.

Clean up because by doing so you will make your premises attractive and help to keep the town free from contagious disease.

Looks as if the rush for postoffice appointments in Pennsylvania would subside, since Palmer failed to reach the senatorial chair.

There are still districts in this county the election officers in which need instructions as to how to make returns of the voting.

Congress will be Democratic by a small margin, but the margin will be big enough to make things unpleasant for the country, just the same.

DuBois citizens voted in favor of making a third class city of that town. Clearfield will not make any change until she can become a first class city.

Now watch Penrose and Brumbaugh getting busy to prepare for the passage of local option, workmen's compensation and child labor bills through the next legislation.

Well, there must have been a good many temperance people in the hunting woods on Tuesday. Give the women a vote and they will at least vote their convictions.

A "woman in black" is frightening the young men of DuBois at night. It would require a score of women in black to scare the boys of Clearfield on the streets late at night.

It would have been a political crime had the voters refused to return Warren Worth Bailey to congress, where he has been a noted figure among the lesser lights at this session.

An army of Pittsburgh hunters, with scores of dogs, is at work in this and adjoining counties bagging everything wearing feathers or hair. And there are not a few game legs among these Pittsburghers.

KERR ADDITION FAST BEING BUILT UP
One of the interesting features of the steady growth and expansion of Clearfield is in the number of houses now going up on what is known as the "Mapes Farm," on the north side of the river, opposite the New York Central yard and roundhouse.

Frank Kerr has laid out a number of desirable building lots there, and they are rapidly being bought up and houses erected.

"TRIUMPH OF CONSCIENCE" AT THE GLOBE TONIGHT

"The Circus and the Boy." Jimmy Jim, visiting his aunt, is lured to the circus and as a makeshift is pressed off as the "only escaped dwarf in captivity." He is having lots of fun until his mother and aunt get trace of him and yank him out of the circus business.

"The Tribunal of Conscience." This is a story of a wayward son of a rich banker. The boy gets into bad company and goes down the scale until the brink is reached, but is saved through the plans of a servant of his father's. The banker helps the scheme along by disappearing, leaving the servant to tell the boy that his father left nothing but debts. The boy turns out to be of the right stuff and reforms.

"Rube, the Interloper." An unscrupulous but very young man is given the scare of his life by a couple of actresses, who catch him peeping through the keyhole of their room door. A fake murder scene is gotten up for the rule's benefit and the finale is ludicrous.

"The Cowboy Seat War" In two special feature reels, tells a story in which politics, love and crime are depicted with the final triumph of justice and the punishment of the criminals. This is an especially good picture. At the Globe.

AMUSEMENTS

"Peg O' My Heart." Oliver Morosco's delightful comedy "Peg O' My Heart," which will shortly be seen at the new opera house on Friday evening, Nov. 23, proves conclusively that New York can still laugh most heartily and sincerely at humor which is not coarse and risqué. This comedy recently confounded its second year at John Court's beautiful theatre, in New York, which shows that a story, directly and simply told, is more potent than any plot contrived, complex or secretly subtle. The play is described as a comedy of youth and love and is from the pen of J. H. M. Manners, who also wrote such wonderful successes as "Zaza" and "The House Next Door." Seats now on sale.

"CUPID PULLS A TOOTH" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

"Cupid Pulls a Tooth." Father couldn't see a daughter as the husband of his daughter. But John proves that dentists are quite necessary to the human race. Finally, he brings father to the way that leaves one agasp with the humor of it.

"Suspended Sentence." A strong Powers drama at the opera house this evening.

King Baggett, the wonderful versatile artist of the Imp Studio, is shown this evening in a film of his own production, "The Rats of Trap."

"Ghosts," is an interesting real at the opera house this evening.

Henderson's Corsets

Are Good Every Day of the Year and for Every Occasion

Hardly a day passes that we do not receive some favorable comment in regard to these corsets and it is the verdict of the ladies of Clearfield and vicinity that no better or more stylish corsets can be secured for the money. Women of discretion buy corsets where the stock comprises many different models, for so doing they know they can be properly fitted to a model that will suit their individual figure.

Our stock of Henderson Back and Front Laced Corsets is unusually complete and includes all of the various seasonable models.

We call your special attention to Henderson Corset, Style 804, which is unquestionably one of the newest and most stylish designs that has been offered this season. It is made of coutil, has a medium low bust, without boning over hips and is so designed to give the new natural figure lines so much in vogue. An undeniably handsome garment that appeals to every woman of excellent dress attainments. Made for average figures.

The Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

(Copyright, 1914, by Harold MacGrath)

"So'm I," agreed Steve. But his intentions were not honorable. He proposed to desert before any fight took place. Not that he was physically afraid; no, he wanted to dig his hands deep into those doubloons and pieces-of-eight.

So the four days down passed otherwise uneventfully, amid paint pots and iron rust and three meals a day of pork, onion soup, potatoes, and strong, bitter coffee. The winds became light and balmy and the sea blue and calm. The men went about in their undershirts and dungarees, barefooted. Of course the coming fight was the main topic of conversation. It promised to be a rattling good scrap for both men were evenly matched, and both had a "kick" in either hand. Even the captain took a mild interest in the affair. He was an old sailor. He knew that there was no such word as arbitration in a sailor's vocabulary; his disputes could be settled only in one manner, by his calloused fists.

When the old mudhook (and some day Steve was going to buy it and hang it over the entrance of the Gilson house) alighted down into the smiling waters of the bay, Steve concluded that discretion was the better part of valor. He would steal ashore on the quarantine tug which lay alongside. He was willing to fight under ordinary circumstances, but he must get his treasure in safety first. They could call him a welscher if they wanted to; devil a bit did he care. So he yanked back the boards of his bunk, wall, took out the box, eyed it fondly, and noted for the first time the lettering on it:

STANLEY HARGREAVE.

He wrinkled his brow in the effort to recall a pirate by this name, but was unsuccessful. No matter. He slipped the box under his coat and made for the gangway, and inadvertently ran into his enemy.

Dunkers caught a bit of the box peeping from under the coat.

"What 'a' yuh got there?" he demanded truculently.

"None o' your damn business! You know me by; heave me!"

"Ain't none o' my business, huh? Where'd yuh git a box like that? Steel it? By criss, I'm goin' t' have a look at that box, my hearty. It don't smell like honest onions."

"You lemme by!" breathed Steve, with murder in his heart.

Suddenly the two men closed, surged back and forth, one determined to take and the other to hold this mysterious box. Dunkers struggled to uphold his word; not that he really wanted the box but to prove that he was strong enough to take it if he wanted to. The name on the box flashed and disappeared. It was a kind of shock to him. He and Blossom went battering against the rail. Dunkers' grip slipped and so did Blossom's. The result was that the box was catapulted into the sea. With an agonizing cry, Blossom leaned far over. He saw the box oscillate for a moment, then sink gracefully in a zigzag course, down through the blue waters. Fainter and fainter it grew, and at last vanished.

"I'm sorry, Steve; but yuh wouldn't let me look at it," said Dunkers, contritely.

"Dama you; I'm goin' t' kill y' for that!"

It became a real fight this time, fist and foot, tooth and nail; one mad with the lust to kill and the other desperately intent on living. It was one of those contests in which honor and fair play have no part. But for the timely arrival of the captain and some of the crew Dunkers would have been badly injured, perhaps fatally. They hauled back Blossom, roaring out his threats at the top of his lungs. It took half an hour's arguing to calm him down. Then the captain demanded to know what it was all about. And, blubbering, Steve told him.

"Six hundred feet of water, if the 'ot my reckoning right. The anchor lies in 60 feet, but the starboard end drops sheer 900. You swab! Why didn't you bring the box to me? A man has a right to what he finds. I'd have taken care of it for you till we got back to port. I knew you were greedy; you thought I might want to stick my fist into your treasure. And you'll never find it in 600 feet of water and tangled, porous coral. That's what you get for being a blamed hog. As for you," and the captain turned to Dunkers, "get your dunnage and your gun and hunt for another boat back. I won't have no murder on board 'Capette." It was the time for disappearing.

"An' keep out o' my way. I'll git y' yet," growled Blossom.

"Keep your mouth shut," said the mate, "or I'll have you put in irons, you pig!"

"All right sir. I've said all I'm goin' t' say t' day," and Blossom strode off.

"What was the box like?" asked the captain of Dunkers.

"Chinese contraption, sir; leastwise it looked that way to me. Didn't look as if it'd been in the water long, sir. Somethin' lost overboard by some private yacht, I'm thinkin'. I'll keep out o' Steve's way. I'll lay low on shore, sir."

And though Steve made a perfect range of the spot, he never came back to find the mysterious box, never saw the Gilson house back home, nor did he ever see Dunkers again. On the voyage home he brooded continually, and was frequently found blubbering; and one night he skipped his watch and went to Davy Jones' locker.

Dunkers had not told about the name he had seen on the box; and Blossom had not thought to. The name Hargreave had instantly brought back to Dunkers' mind the newspaper stories he had recently read. There was no doubt in the world that this box belonged to the missing millionaire, who had drawn a million from his banks and vanished; and, moreover, there was no doubt in Dunkers' mind that this million lay in the Bahaman waters. It had been drawn up from the bottom of the sound, under the path of the balloon. He proceeded, then, to take a most minute range. It would require money and partners; but half a loaf would be far better than no loaf at all; and he was determined to return to New York to find backing. Finding is keeping, on land or sea.

Now it happened that his favorite grog shop was a chow-chow across the way from the headquarters of the Black Hundred; and Vroom occasionally dropped in, for he often picked up a valuable bit of maritime news. Dunkers was an old friend of the bar-keeper, and he proceeded to pour and guzzle down his throat a very poor substitute for whiskey. He became communicative. He bragged. He knew where there was a million, and all he needed was a first-class diving bell. A year from now he would not be drinking cheap whisky; he'd be steering a course up and down Broadway and buying wine when he was thirsty. He was no miser. But he had to have a diving bell; and where the blue devil could he get one with $12 and an ingersoll watch in his pocket?

From his table Vroom made a sign which the bartender understood. Then he rose and approached Dunkers.

"I own a pretty good diving apparatus," he said. "If you've got the goods, I'll take a chance on a fifty-fifty basis." Vroom did not believe there was anything back of his talk; but it always paid to dig deep enough to find out. "Have a drink; and, Bill, give us a real whisky and none of your soap-lye. Now, let's hear your yarn."

"I don't know yuh," said Dunkers, with drunken caution. "How is it, Bill?" turning to the bartender.

"He's the goods, Jim. You've heard of Wyant & Co.?"

"Sure I've heard of them. Best divin' apparatus they is."

"Well, this gent here is Mr. Brooks, general manager for Wyant & Co. I can O. K. him."

Vroom threw an appreciative glance at the bartender. He was not affiliated with the Black Hundred, but he had often aided Vroom in minor affairs.

"All right, if yuh say so, Bill. Well, here's the yarn."

And when he had done, Vroom smoked quietly without speaking.

"Don't yuh believe it?" demanded Dunkers, truculently.

"But 600 feet of water, in a coral bottom, and no way of telling just where it fell overboard. That's a tough proposition."

"O' it is, is it? I'm a sailor. I can lay my hand right over 'er spot. Do yuh think I'd be fool enough t' hunt for it without a perfect range?" Dunkers tapped his coat pocket suggestively.

And Vroom knew that the one thing he wanted was there, a plan or a drawing of the range. So there was another man shanghaied that night, and his destination was Cape Town, 22 days' voyage by the calendar.

Vroom carried his information to the organization that same night. They would start the expedition at once, and till this was accomplished, Hargreave's daughter was to be immune from attacks. Besides, it would give Hargreave (wherever he was) and the others the idea that the Black Hundred had concluded to give up the chase.

Above, with his ear to a small hole, skillfully bored through the ceiling without permitting the plaster to fall, knelt a man with a bandaged arm. He could never see any faces; no one ever took off a mask in this sinister chamber. But there were voices, and he was going to forget some of them. After the meeting came to an end, he waited an hour after, and then stole down into the street by the aid of the fire escape. Later, he entered a telephone booth and called up Jones.

Then, one leathern and steel box, dotted with bits of ivory and mother-of-pearl, became two; and the second one was soaked in mud and salt water for two weeks till you could not have told it from the original. And that is why Jones was able, some weeks later, to hide once more the original box. As for the substitute, just as Braine was about to use a mallet and chisel upon it, the lights went out. There was a wild scramble, a chair or two was overturned.

"The door, the door!" shrieked Braine, furious.

It slammed the moment the words left his lips. And as suddenly as they had gone out the lights sprang up. The box was gone. There were evidently traitors among the Black Hundred.

BOBBY FOLWELL KING OF FOOTBALL TRAINERS

BY FRANK G. MENKE.

(Special to the Progress.)

New York, Nov. 6.—Robert C.

Folwell stands out today as the most remarkable coach

able to lead his team to Victory over the best of them.

He went to

Washington

and Jefferson college, where the enrollment

is only 350, and built up a team

in 1913 that scored 357

points, that won nine out of ten games and held the great Yale eleven to a scoreless tie in the tenth game. This year he is back with even a more wonderful team.

He is back in 1914 with a team that ripped the hide off of the Yale eleven two weeks ago, the same

Yale team that was heralded far and wide as the best Yale team in ten years. Not only that but W. & J.

tackled Harvard just a week before in Harvard's own football lot and played Harvard practically to a standstill.

"Hurry Up" Yest of Michigan,

Percy Haughton, of Harvard, Alonzo

Stagg, of Chicago, Frank Hickey, of

Yale, and Gene Warner, of Carlisle, are great coaches. They have accomplished wonderful things in their careers. But the accomplishments of each pale into insignificance in comparison with what Folwell, a former University of Pennsylvania player, has done.

Why shouldn't Yest, Stagg, Haughton and the others get together great football eleven? They have a student enrollment of from 4000 to 6000 to draw from each year. When they send out a call for football candidates from 200 to 500 men who had considerable football experience at prep and high schools answer the call. And they have a dozen former football stars to assist them in their coaching work.

And Folwell? How different is his situation. W. & J. although one of the oldest colleges was of the Alleghenies, is one of the smaller. Its student enrollment this year is about 340. Last year it was about 320. Folwell last year and this year had to make his selection from among men who would not be given a second thought by the coaches of other colleges. He had to make his selection from little men—from the kind of men that Yale, Harvard and Michigan would not have considered at all because of their lighthness and their smallness.

Yet, Folwell, handicapped by the lack of bulk and brawn, did not become discouraged. His men had brains, they had courage and they were game to the core. No chance scared them. So Folwell picked out about 25 of the most likely looking candidates, welded them into a machine that, when all things are considered, is the most wonderful football machine ever put together.

The W. & J. backfield this year averages 5 feet 8 inches in height and 160 pounds in weight. It is lighter and shorter in average size than any first-class team in the country, yet that 160 pound backfield tore the powerful Yale and Harvard line to shreds. It ripped through the strong Mr. Union team as though it were paper and then rolled up a 105 to 0 score against Dickinson.

The W. & J. line has thrown back the charging Yale backs. It has thrown back the Harvard backfield and it has thrown back for losses every team that tried to force its way through. It's a pigmy line in comparison with that of the big colleges in the East. It is a Gibraltar line, the best lines ever put together.

What W. & J. lacks in size it makes up in brains and spirit. Every man on the W. & J. team must be a Class A. student or he doesn't play football. In W. & J. studies come first. If a student is up in his studies he may play football. If he isn't he can't play.

Folwell went to W. & J. college when it was a little-known institution in a football way. In less than two years he brought it to the fore as one of the greatest football institutions in America. Folwell went there and found about 10 unlikely looking footballers responding to his call for candidates. He quickly found that those who presented themselves then were all that would present themselves—that the college was so small that the candidates were but few.

Wounded Briton Wakes to Find Himself Buried
In Pile of Dead.

A LETTER from an American of dual in Germany tells of a conversation with Lieutenant Weddigen, the commander of the submarine which sank the British cruiser Hogue, Aboukir and Cressy last night, according to reports in German papers, also the cruiser Hawke.
Lieutenant Weddigen almost spared the Cressy, feeling strongly against sinking this last ship to the bottom because it was the only thing that saved the men from the other cruiser who were struggling in the water.
Lieutenant Weddigen said that through the periscope of the submarine he observed both other ships sink with the Cressy alongside for rescue.
The have appalled him and he almost determined to let the Cressy stay afloat. He was about to leave the per-iscope and retire when his commander, who was also shot, included Weddigen, "You know

ected with the aid of captive balloons fastened to automobiles and constantly changing their positions."

When the Hindu Soldiers Charged.

A dispatch to the London Daily Telegraph dated "Northern France," relates the first instance of the British Indian troops coming into action.

"It was at La Bassée," says the dispatch, "when by a great effort the Germans carried the British trenches and the position looked dangerous. An avalanche of the enemy poured through evidently supposing that the way was open to the coast. They had a rude awakening."

"The supports of the British line were the Indian troops, who had been thriving to prove their quality. It was a bayonet affair, and the German advance was beaten and broken. The Indians ran through them, using the steel in their own workmanlike fashion and thrusting the foe back to re-
ish infantry, who awaited their coming."

"Not only did the Indians regain the lost trenches, but they pursued the enemy down the hill until their officers thought it prudent to recall them."

Frenchwomen Give Blood.

An appeal was issued by the military medical authorities at Lyons for volunteers for blood transfusion. It said:

"There are many wounded who are so exhausted from loss of blood that the only chance of saving their lives is by prompt transfusion from the veins of a healthy, strong, living man or woman. Those who wish to offer their blood for such transfusions are invited to give their names to the Hotel Dieu."

Within a short time after the appearance of the notice 120 names of volunteers had been registered, with women appearing conspicuously in the list which included all classes of society. So prompt was the response that Dr. Carrel, pathologist of the Rockefeller institute and now head of one of the Lyons hospitals, was able to save several patients at once.

Alive In Pile of Dead.

A wounded British soldier tells a story of an experience which recalls the grim experience of Bata's Colonel Chabert, and which also illustrates the severity of the fighting.

This soldier said he remembered the start of a fierce fight in the trenches.
Then his mind became a blank for many hours. When he recovered his senses it was morning, and he had an awful feeling of suffocation. When he tried to move he realized that he was in a trench, buried beneath a pile of German and British dead.

The enemy had retired temporarily and eventually the soldier was able to crawl to the next line of trenches which were occupied by his comrades.
Then he was sent to the rear.

Having Awful Time, but Happy

Lieutenant Thomas of the Third Cheshires writes a friend he is having an awful time—"about 1,000 times worse than the infernal regions." His grub is dog biscuits and bully beef, his bed is the trenches and open fields, he is often in mud to his knees, the weather is as rotten, and if he gets out alive he will be surprised. Yet he says, "I am well and happy."

Back to Days of Armor

The Paris Journal d'Information states that the French infantry have now gained much ground in the Verdun region through the use of steel trepanners, which though unable to resist point blank bullets are nevertheless impenetrable at a range which permits troops to pause before the last rush with the bayonet.

The Journal de Rennes announces that the Russian government decided to adopt the flamethrower as the outbreak of the war and placed immen-dous orders with a factory at St. Etienne of France which had the exclusive right of manufacturing them.

The French government also has not ordered large quantities and has also ordered the transporters employed in the trenches which is busy night and day.

Birds Blamed For Hog Cholera

And fowls and other birds are blamed by the farmers in their counties surrounding Joliet, Ill., for the loss of more than $75,000 worth of hogs and the spread of hog cholera over that part of the country. Farmers are adopting desperate measures to check the disease. Parties of hunters have been organized for the purpose of shooting the pigeons, which fly from farm to farm spreading the germs of the epidemic with great rapidity.

"Birds are one of the most prolific sources of infection for hogs," said Dr. Hauck of the United States bureau of animal industry.

Won't Have Soiled Tombstones Around Tombstones are being removed from the cemetery of my neighbors in order to prevent the spread of disease.

CHAPTER XLVI.

Flood and Fire.

Streaming to make himself heard above the roar of the deluge, Barcus shouted in Alan's ear:

"That devil! He's found the reservoir—opened the sluiceways—turned it into that shaft! We're done for!" Alan had no argument with which to rebuff him. Silently getting on his feet, he groped for Rose in the darkness, momentarily becoming more aware as the fall of water shut out the light, and drew her away with him, the slight incline that led back to the bulkhead.

The hour that followed lived over in his memory as an hour in hell. No ray of hope lightened its impenetrable darkness. He could say nothing to comfort the girl; heavily though she strove to keep up her heart, time and again sobbing in his arms like a mad thing, when panic dread caught her, the neck as a terrible catches a rat. He did there, in the darkness, like so many nervous animals trapped in a snare.

The water mounted rapidly. Within five minutes it drove them back to the elbow in the tunnel; within ten it began their ankles as they lingered there, doubting which was the greater peril, to advance or to stand fast and let the flooding tide snuff out the fire. To return to the neighbor, head of the bulkhead was to court the death indicated by the fuse and the bag of blasting powder.

Of a sudden the thought crossed Alan's mind that Marrophat had arranged the latter solely to keep them away from the bulkhead. Now that he thought of it, he felt certain that the powder room had been deliberately flooded to him by Jimmy.

Probably, then, the keg and fuse were but stage properties—or possibly

Whether or no, was death in one form preferable to the other? He was decidedly of the opinion that it was better to be extinguished once and for all time, in the space of a second, annihilated by an explosion, than to die thus lingeringly.

On this consideration, he drew Rose with him back to the bulkhead.

When they had been some fifteen minutes beside the bulkhead, the water mounted the head of a slight rise perhaps ten feet behind them, and poured down in ever deeper volume to back up against the barrier.

It was waist deep, however, before they retreated to the head of that rise.

Half an hour later it was waist deep there, on the highest spot in the tunnel.

In fifteen minutes more it had reached their chests. And they stood with head against the roof of the tunnel.

Holding Rose close to him, Alan kissed her lips, that were as cold as death.

Then, fumbling under water, he found the hand of the man at his side. The water lapped his lips like a blind hand.

In the tunnel that branched off from the main shaft, beyond the bulkhead, some thirty minutes before this June day, a candle had guttered in its stick.

Alan Negotiates for the Burros.

Alan said his last words farewell to Rose and Barcus, the fire spread out in the bottom of the shaft and invaded the powder room.

Alan had guessed right at Marrophat's design; the keg of blasting powder was less than an eighth full; its explosion could not possibly have effected the cave-in Alan had at first feared.

But what Marrophat had overlooked was the proximity to the bag of some several sticks of dynamite, loaded by a firm of earth that had fallen from the crumbling walls.

When the blasting fuse dropped sparks into the blasting powder this last exploded right willingly and the dynamite took its own without the least delay.

The resultant detonation was so loud that the bulkhead was crushed in.

Like an eggshell barrier. Part of the walls fell in, but the tunnels and shaft remained intact. The released flood streamed out and spread swiftly to the farthest recesses of the burning tunnel. Dense clouds of steam filled that place of terror as the fires were extinguished.

Swept with the stream as it poured out of the tunnel, Alan contrived throughout to retain his hold round the waist of Rose. Barcus shot past him unseen in the darkness. It was not until Alan had contrived to catch an unburned timber and stay himself and his almost witless burden beneath the mouth of the shaft that he discovered Barcus alive, if almost unrecognizable in his mask of mold and soot, battling back toward the shaft against the kneedesp tide.

Half-blinded and stifled as he was by the reek of steam and powder fumes, Alan struggled with himself until his wits were passably clear.

Immediately before him dangled the hoisting bucket and rope.

Surrendering the care of Rose to Barcus, Alan climbed into the bucket and stared upward, examining the walls of the shaft for a way to the top.

There was none other than the most difficult; gaps too great to be bridged by climbing showed in the wooden ladders.

The one feasible route was via the rope. And there was nobody at the top to work the windlass—and Alan hoped there would be nobody to oppose his essay.

He addressed himself to the task without murmuring—lifted himself up on the rope, wound it round one leg and began that heartbreaking climb.

How he accomplished it he never knew. That it must be accomplished was his one, all-absorbing thought. And somehow, by some almost superhuman effort, it was eventually accomplished.

He arrived at the top of the shaft far too exhausted to show surprise when, falling in half-fainting condition within two feet of the brink, he saw Judith Trine running like mad across the clearing.

But without her aid he would not within hours have been able to work the windlass and lift Rose and Barcus to the surface.

CHAPTER XLVII.

The Last Warning.

In the chill, violet-shadowed dusk of that clear evening, a chap-fallen motor car crept sluggishly into the little mountain town of Mesquite at the heels of two mottled mules, driven by a chauffeur who steered with one hand while the other flourished a crackling whip-lash over the backs of its sole motive power.

Its one passenger, a cripple as helpless as the car itself, huddled in a corner of the rear seat, saluted Mesquite with a snarl. Though he was in sore need of such rude comforts as the town stood prepared to afford him, his demeanor toward it was that of one who suffers an indignity rather than begs accommodation.

And now, as the car crawled to a pause before the Mountain house—Mesquite's one caravanserai—and Mesquite itself, to the last flea-bitten board, gathered round to view this wonder, Mr. Trine's indignation and chagrin distilled words of poisonous import.

Far from resenting this, Mesquite, pipe in mouth, hands in pockets, admired and applauded, and rather resented the change that befell when two other strangers (whose earlier appearance in town had helped make that one day memorable beyond all others in Mesquite's history) charged out of the Mountain house and interrupted the elder devil with cries of greeting and jubilation.

The leader of these answered to the name of Marrophat; his companion was a person named Jimmy. Mesquite acquired this information through paying close attention to the substance of their communications with the cripple. More than this, however, it learned little. Something seemed to have been accomplished by the two, something that was highly gratifying to Seneca Trine; for he was chuckling almost mirthfully when lifted from the car and carried into the hotel.

What passed between the trio after they disappeared behind that bedchamber door Mesquite could by no means guess. But that a celebration of some sort was in progress was evidenced by the frequency with which Marrophat and Jimmy called on the bar for more liquid refreshment.

And toward midnight one belated Mesquite paused in the street outside the Mountain house for one last curious stare at the lighted windows of Mr. Trine's quarters.

He saw, clearly silhouetted against the glowing oblong of the window, the Mephistophelean profile of Seneca Trine, distorted with a grimace of the cruellest joy that ever heart of man conceived. He saw Marrophat approach his master with a drunken swagger and a speech which, though indistinguishable to the unseen auditor, unquestionably afforded both of the other men ample excuse for ecstatic glee. Toward its conclusion Mr. Marrophat apparently capped the peak of jubilation by fumbling in his coat pocket and bringing forth something which strongly resembled a single playing card.

Now when he had contrived to master his mirth, the cripple made a gesture which eloquently abolished this card, a gesture which said quite plainly: "All that is finished. The thing has served its purpose! To hell with it!"

Whereupon, with a smart jerk of his wrist, Mr. Marrophat sent the card spinning and sailing out through the open window to lose itself in the night.

The watcher didn't see it fall, and though he spent an unconscionable time searching for it in the deep dust of the roadway, he went his way in the end with curiosity unsated. Fate had reserved that card for a higher purpose.

It Was a Trey of Hearts.

Undisturbed, it lay where it had fallen, face upward, not a dozen feet from the front door of the Mountain house, until another day dawned on Mesquite.

Then, in the clear light of that dawn, four more strangers struggled into town—two weary and haggard men, two footsore and bedraggled women. One of these last was dressed in a suit of man's clothing, much the worse for wear.

At sight of the Mountain house the party betrayed slight symptoms of a more cheerful spirit; rejoicing in its promise of food and drinks and beds, withal wherein to sleep, the four quickened their steps.

But of a sudden one of the women—she who wore the garments of her sex—paused, uttered a low cry, a thrill with terror, and clutching the arm of the man nearest her, pointed down to the card that stared up from the dust at her feet.

It was a Trey of hearts.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Full Flight.

"Oh, what can it mean?" Rose whispered brokenly, clinging to her lover's arm. "Surely you don't think . . . Surely, it must be accidental . . . Surely it can't mean—"

"I'm afraid it does," Alan Law responded gravely, eyeing the front of the Mountain house. "Our luck holds consistently—that's all. It wouldn't be us if we didn't pick out the one place where Marrophat and Jimmy would stop over night. Fortunately, it's early; I doubt they're up. With half a show we ought to be able to find some way of putting a good distance between us and this town before they waken . . . Tom!"

But Mr. Barcus was already at his elbow, in thorough sympathy with Alan's interpretation of the significance to be attached to the card that trembled in Rose's hand.

"Sharp's the word!" he agreed. "And there's a motor car over there, in front of the blacksmith's. Probably we can hire her—"

"Trine's car!" Alan ejaculated, swinging round and recognizing the automobile at a glance. "Then he's here, as well!"

"Looks like it," Barcus admitted. "But so much the better. Well, just naturally take the darn thing off his hands, and I'll bet a dollar there isn't another car within a radius of fifty miles! We'll be well out of these sticky mountains long before he finds anything to chase us with."

But his confidence was demonstrated to be premature by the discovery, which rewarded the first cursory examination, that the car was very thoroughly out of commission.

Two minutes later, however, their earnest inquiries elicited the fact that, although Barcus was justified in his surmise that the neighboring country was poverty-stricken in respect of motor cars, Mesquite itself boasted two motorcycles whose owners were not indifferent to a chance to sell them second-hand at a considerable advance on the retail list price of the machines, when new.

And thus it was that, within ten minutes from Rose's discovery of that chance-fung warning in the dust, the party was again in rapid motion.

His beauty sleep disturbed by the departure of the machine bearing Barcus and Judith, Seneca Trine roused on an elbow and looked out of the window just in time to see the second motorcycle gathering momentum, Alan steering, Rose in the seat behind.

Sixty seconds later a flaunting banner of dust was all that remained to remind Mesquite that romance had passed that way—that, and a series of passionate screams emanating from the bedchamber of Seneca Trine, where the cripple lay possessed by seven devils of insensate rage.

His screams brought attendance; but it was a matter of many precious minutes before his demands could be met and Marrophat and Jimmy roused from their capricious slumbers in adjoining chambers; and half an hour elapsed before the chauffeur, roused from his own well-earned rest, succeeded in convincing the pair that pursuit with the motor car was out of the question.

But the devil takes care of his own: within another half hour what seemed to be a sheer, bull-headed, dumb luck brought a casual automobile to Mesquite—a two-seater, high-power racing machine of the latest and speediest pattern, driven by two irresponsible wayfarers who proved only too susceptible to Marrophat's offer of double the cost of the car—f. o. b. Detroit—for its immediate surrender.

The two piled out promptly enough: Marrophat and Jimmy jumped in; Trine from his bedroom window sped them on their murderous mission with a blast of blasphemy.

It must have been an hour later when Alan, checking his motorcycle as it surmounted the summit of a long upgrade, looked back and discovered, several miles distant on the far-flung windings of the mountain road, a small crimson shape that ran like a mad thing tirelessly pursued by a cloud of tawny dust like a golden ghost.

A motor car, beyond all question, and one of uncommon road-devouring quality; it might or might not contain Marrophat and Jimmy, once more in pursuit. Whether or not, bitter experience had long since educated Alan in the gentle art of taking no chances.

Though it was his life that they sought so pertinaciously, no later than yesterday (and then by no means for the first time), they had proved that if Rose were with Alan they would include her ruthlessly in whatever scheme they might contemplate for his personal extermination.

Nor would Tom Barcus be exempt, though Judith might be, in view of Marrophat's infatuation for the girl. These two were far ahead, out of sight, indeed; and must somehow be overtaken and warned—no easy matter, since the machine which bore them was, if anything, faster than Alan's, just as the racing automobile was faster than either.

Alan kept his gaze steadfast to the road before them, daring not once to look up and round or back.

So sinuous and meandering was its course, indeed, that Alan seldom could see a hundred yards of it ahead, but must peep on in panic flight, hoping for the best—that Judith and Barcus would soon show up in front, that something might happen to hinder the pursuit—never knowing whether the latter lost or gained.

And thus catastrophe befell! Round the swelling bosom of a wooded mountainside the motorcycle swept like a hunted hare, and without the least warning came upon Barcus and Judith, dismounted, Barcus bending over his cycle and tinkering with its motor.

For one horripilating instant collision seemed unavoidable. Barcus and Judith, and the motorcycle occupied most of the width of the road; there was little room between them and the forest. To try to pass them on the latter side would be only to dash his brains out against the trees; while to make the attempt on the outside would be to risk leaving the road altogether and dashing off into space . . .

And it was impossible to stop the cycle—so brief was all his warning. In desperation Alan chose the outside—the road; and for the space of a single heartbeat thought that he might possibly make it, but with the next realized that he would not—seeing the front wheel swing off over the lip of the slope.

At this he acted sharply and upon sheer instinct. As the cycle left the road altogether he risked a broken knee by releasing his grasp of the handlebars and straightening out his leg and driving it down forcibly against the roadbed. The effect of this was to lift him bodily from the saddle; the machine shot from beneath him like some strange projectile buried from the bore of a great gun, and Rose crashed against him in the same fraction of a second.

Headlong they plunged as one down the hillside, struck its shelving surface a good twenty feet from the brink of the road, and flying apart tumbled their separate ways down the remainder of the drop and into the friendly shelter of the underbrush.

Something nearly miraculous saved them whole. Beyond a few scratches and bruises and a severe shaking, they escaped unharmed. And they were picking themselves up and regaining their breath and re-collecting their scattered wits when, with a petus no less terrific than their own had been, the pursuing motor car swung round the bend and hurtled itself directly at the two who remained upon the road above.

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNESY

Take a tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder Bothers.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

if by simultaneous thunder-bolts, reminding one of nothing so much as the wholesale extinctions of the populations of Herculaneum and Pompeii.

Such an account sounds mysterious. Were the Germans killed where they stood by violent and over-powering, poisonous fumes? Is that the "Great Secret?" Continuing the correspondent says:

"On the borders of one of the forests, a company of Prussian infantry at bivouac is laid out as if it was surprised by the fire. Two sentries are still grasping their rifles and a little way off a messenger lies by himself."

"Further on an officer lies a few yards from his men, who are stretched out with loosened belts and lying in their blankets. Two of them still hold playing cards in their hands."

"Those sleeping and those who were awake when they died evidently were swept out of life together without apparently having had time to move."

The same thing is noticeable on other battle fields in France, say various writers but not one of them has made any attempt to explain the matter. Evidently, when the French talked about their "great secret" they had in mind something worth talking about. Is the mysterious "withering death" of their three-inch field guns the "secret?" Apparently the results, and the comments of observers, would indicate as much.

The Germans, according to all accounts, were killed in some way other than by bullets or fragments of shells. They have been smothered to death, evidently by powerful concussion, or have been asphyxiated by powerful deadly gas.

Recording further instances of apparently mysterious deaths among the Germans, the correspondent says: "Even more extraordinary is another group of sixty dead lying about a small haystack as if in sleep, their rifles stacked and their knapsacks arranged in orderly heaps."

"In the outer ring the path of the shells can be traced in a direct line by heaps of bodies, but the particular shell that killed these sixty struck them in front, from behind, and at the sides with the same sudden death and yet none of them bears any outward wound. Then they are stretched face downward or staring up at the sky, seemingly paralyzed by the mere force of the explosion."

"The same mysterious results were seen in many of the trenches where Germans were piled in rows. The German army to the east and north of Rheims was stated to be strongly entrenched in deep cuttings, with non-proof shelters and rest houses underground and very similar ones were found at Metz, behind the Ourcq. One of these was a mile and a quarter long with tunnels in all directions yet it was filled with dead."

"Along the whole length of the battle line, according to all the stories of French artillery men, Germans never were able to stand before the fire of the French guns whenever it found them out, but latterly as soon as a French battery opened, a hasty retreat was quickly followed by heavy bombardment by big calibre German artillery far out of range."

"That the Germans are beginning to feel discouraged is gathered from letters seized and statements made by officer prisoners. A lieutenant of the Twenty-sixth Artillery regiment writes, the Tenth Corps has been fighting incessantly since the beginning of the campaign. Almost all our horses were gone. We had been under fire from 5 A. M. to 8 P. M. without food or drink. The French Artillery fire was terrific. I am so worn out that I can hardly sit on a horse even at a walk. Even at night our camp cannot rest. A French machine gun night threw four bombs, three of which killed and wounded twenty horses and four men. We got no letters."

"An officer of the Prussian guard says, 'My regiment started with sixty officers and only five are left out of more than 2,000 men. The regiment is a mere relic.'"

CLEARFIELD H. S. WINS FROM THE DUBOIS ELEVEN

Clearfield has every right to feel exceedingly proud of its 1914 high school football team. A great many citizens have felt that way for some time, but just now they feel doubly so, for on Saturday, at the Driving Park, the local boys administered a decisive defeat to Dubois high, the first gridiron contest between the schools to be won by C. H. S. in almost a decade and a half. The score was 13-0. There was not a single unpleasant incident to mar the glory of the victory, the decisions of the officials and the conduct of players and spectators being exceedingly satisfactory to the management of both teams.

Owing to the ancient rivalry between the two towns represented and the fact that this game marked the renewal of athletic relations between the schools after a three-year period of estrangement, the crowd at the game was the largest of the season. Ideal football weather prevailed.

As to the game itself, it was, in the opinion of those who have been following the local team, the slowest and the best game of football ever witnessed in Clearfield. Every inch of ground gained by either side was secured only after strenuous playing which at all times was aggressive, but never unnecessarily rough.

During the first period the ball exchanged hands several times, but neither side was able to advance it within striking distance of the opponents' goal. It was not until late in the second period that Clearfield after several times rushing the ball to the Dubois 15 yard line sent Ed, crashing through the line for the first score of the game. McQuillen failed to kick the goal.

The second touchdown for the local boys came in the third period when after rushing the ball down the field on tackle backs and end runs, "Tip" Stewart tore through the Dubois line and placed the ball behind the goal posts. W. Flegal kicked the goal, making the score 13-0.

The local team then played the game for all that was in them, and so can hardly be said that anyone did better than another. The team went into the game confident that they were a better team, and this mental attitude went a long way toward winning the victory, and proving beyond a doubt that they were champions of Clearfield county and contenders for championship honors of the section.

The team which represented Dubois was one of the strongest and

Dubois: Sheffer, left end; Geary, left tackle; Hubbs, left guard; Swisher, center; Rossinger, right guard; Jones, right tackle; Yeager, quarterback; Oberender, halfback; Montgomery, fullback; Ryan, left halfback; Osborn, right halfback.

Touchdowns—Bell, Stewart. Substitutions—Dubois: Merris for Sheffer, Hewitt for Hubbs, Bloom for Jones, Jones for Osborn. Clearfield: Wallace for W. Flegal, Patcher for Chase.

Referee—Henderson, Dickinson, Empire—Koss, Bucknell. Time of quarters—15 and 12 minutes, alternating.

Hello! Have you paid your income tax yet?
Orvis Ogden is framing his new house and the weather has been against him, as the wind has been very high the past two days.
Of course, you have been advised to do your Christmas shopping early.
We have already delivered several parcels with instructions on outside
"Please do not open till Christmas".
And, by the way, we delivered 10,052 pieces of mail during the month of October and collected nearly 1000 pieces. The department interns us that the postage cancelled on the mail carried by rural carriers will just about one-half pay their salaries, but the postage on my first, third, and fourth class amounted to $120 a mail delivered and $21 on collected.
Second class goes by weight and as I do not know exact rate, do not know what the postage amounted to or if.We mentioned in a former episode that certain persons evidently came to town to get enthusiasm. Well, we saw one man who evidently got too much, as we saw him lying beside the road sleeping; and, take our word for it, a man sleeping off an overdose of "enthusiasm" is not a very edifying spectacle. Incidentally this was the morning after election.
Wonder where he could have got it?IN THE ORPHANS COURT OF

$4,800 For A $6,500 Home

This is one of the best opportunities ever offered in Clearfield.

The property is located in the very best residential section of Clearfield. The house has 13 rooms with every modern convenience, including electric light, gas, hot water heating system, open fire place, and is finished in hard wood.

If you were to build now you could not duplicate this property for $6,500. It is delightfully arranged and comfortable, and is an ideal home.

My business interests are elsewhere so for 60 days, I have decided to consider offers at the Sacrifice Price of $4,800.

If you want a home that will prove an investment and a delight, write today.

DU BOIS ACORN CLUB VOTES TO BECOME "WET"

At a meeting of the Acorn club, in DuBois, called for the purpose of voting on a resolution to amend the constitution so as to exclude the serving of intoxicating liquors at functions given by the club, twenty-two members, leading citizens and business men of DuBois, resigned when the club voted "wet."

The Acorn club has no sideboard and has always been almost "dry." At the annual banquet, and perhaps three times yearly, liquors have been served. This is the second refusal made to do away with serving liquor by the club.

Twenty-two men who resigned are churchmen of DuBois and gave as their reasons that they could not consistently be members of a club that serves liquor and live up to their pretensions in the church.

The program includes the following:

Wednesday—Conference and enrollment of officers and delegates.

HIS LIFE SAVED BY A CRUCIFIX

proaching Germans would have been robbed of an easy entry into the allies' territory.

One of the officers on the ill-fated Cressy which was sunk by the German submarines was severely injured on the head, had both his legs broken and his feet crushed as he was thrown into the air by the explosion. His body was sucked under the water by the sinking cruiser, but was picked up by one of the rescue ships.

Twenty-four hours afterwards the injured officer regained consciousness and his first words were, "Are we downhearted? No!"

Honor for a Sergeant

A sergeant of the line was made adjutant for his coolness and bravery in an engagement, in Lorraine. With three men the sergeant was sent across an open field to attack the line of the Germans so the colonel could tell where the enemy's trenches were and what their probable strength was.

A hail of bullets was directed at the four men. They made their way to a small farmhouse where they climbed up on a tile roof and from the shelter of a chimney began firing at the Germans. Angered by the impudence of the four soldiers the Germans directed one of their batteries on the house and razed it.

"My smartest patrol leader is gone," the colonel remarked, as he saw the building crumbling. The three privates were no more, but the little sergeant was seen running across the field toward his command. When the sergeant arrived breathless at headquarters the colonel asked with much severity why he did not "try to continue the line."

"Sorry sir, but the pigs knocked my house down," was the reply.
